(Associated Press Sports Editor.)

Franklin Field, Philadelphia, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The green-jerseyed football cyclone from South Bend, sushing the colors of Notre Dame toward another national championship, leveled the ramparts of the University of Pennsylvania today with one of the greatest scoring onslaughts ever witnessed on an American college gridiron.

The final score was Notre Dame, 60, Pennsylvania 20, nine touchdowns to three. But the margin might have been 100 to 0 if the Rockne regulars had stayed in the game long enough to sustain the bewildering pace they set midway in the first half and again throughout the third quarter.

"Irish" Dazzle 80,000 Crowd.

Nothing like this, not even the famous "Warner offensive" of 1928, has been witnessed on Eastern gridirons since football players wore beards.

It dazzled a crowd of 80,000, the greatest that ever packed Franklin Field. It amazed the experts, leaving them somewhat incoherent in their search for adjectives. It left the Pennsylvania football players stunned from the absorption of probably the worst route in the entire history of Red and Blue football.

Pennsylvania has been beaten by as lop-sided a margin, such as the 41—0 plastering administered by Eddie Kaw and Cornell nine years ago in the mud, but the only thing that saved the Quakers from a worse licking today was the fact that Notre Dame's regulars played only about half the game.

All three of Pennsylvania's touchdowns, one at the close of the first half and two more toward the end of the game, were scored against second, third and fifth string Irish players.

When Frank Carideo, all-American quarter back, and Marty Brill, the Philadelphia boy, who came back to show the home folks he had made good, left the field with other regulars toward the end of the third quarter, the score was 54 to 7. Penn was demoralized and the game was reduced to a lingering, colorless scramble between the battered Quaker and Irish fledglings.

Brill Shows Home Folks How.

Brill, son of a Philadelphia millionaire street car manufacturer, wore the red and blue a few years ago but wasn't considered good enough to hold down a regular post. He went West, convinced Knute Rockne he could play first-string football and came home today to prove it by scoring three of the eight touchdowns put over by the Irish regulars.

Brill scored the first touchdown in the opening period in a sensational 67-yard jaunt off tackle. He scored two more in succession in the third period on dashes of 37 and 23 yards to climax two of the unstoppable charges of the Rough Riders.

When he left the field shortly afterward he received the greatest ovation any invading performer has received on Franklin Field since Red Grange ran wild here in 1925.

Except for the ninth and last touchdown which the subs managed to squeeze over late in the game after a lot of hard work, all of the tallies

Police Capture Liquor Still, Two Men in Raid

Two men were arrested and a 70-gallon still, 350 gallons of rye mash, 7 gallons of alleged rye liquor, and 100 pounds of sugar were seized by police when they raided a house on Newton street near Highland place northeast, led by Sergt. G. M. Little of the liquor squad, yesterday afternoon.

The men who were arrested gave their names as John T. Hare, 43 years old, of O street near Twenty-first street northwest, and Roland Lawrence, 45 years old, of Massachusetts avenue near Fourth street northwest. Both gave bond for their appearance in Police Court tomorrow.

Midwest Elevens Gain Honors Against East

Football honors of the day fell to the Midwest yesterday in a wholesale invasion of the East. Three of the four major teams that sallied forth to Eastern gridirons were successful with only Army's 13-0 defeat of Illinois preventing a clean sweep.

Notre Dame crushed Penn, 60-20; Michigan beat Harvard, 6-3, and Ohio State routed Navy, 27-0. Other features in the East were Princeton's 13-9 defeat by Lehigh; Colgate's 54-0 triumph over Columbia, and Georgia's 7-6 victory over New York University.

No major team fell from the unbeaten ranks with Fordham continuing its streak at the expense of Detroit, 13 to 7.

Of the local teams, Georgetown contributed the feature with a 20-19 victory over Boston College at Boston. Maryland defeated Washington and Lee, 41 to 7, and Catholic U. trounced American, 80 to 0.

GEORGETOWN RALLY WINS 20-19 BATTLE

J. Bozek Races 80 Yards for Decisive Goal Against Boston College.

SCALZI ALSO BRILLIANT

Special to The Washington Post.

Boston, Nov. 8.—Coming from behind twice, Georgetown defeated Boston College, 20-19, at Fenway Park here today in a hair-raising game of wide-open football that kept 15,000 spectators in a state of near hysteria as 30 and 40 yard forward passes, mixed with flashing open-field running, switched the fortunes of war with bewildering rapidity.

To the educated toe of John Scalzi, Hilltop quarter back, and to the all-round running, passing and kicking ability of John Bozek, his running mate at right half back, went the honors that spelled the ultimate margin of victory.

It was Scalzi who converted two points after touchdown with drop-kicks, while B. C. was able to cash in but once, while Bozek, besides throwing two passes that went for touchdowns, produced the final one himself in the fourth period, when he galloped 80 yards from scrimmage through the entire B. C. squad.

The game started on a wide-open basis and remained that way throughout, both teams firing passes from all parts of the field. Georgetown's first scoring threat carried to the B. C. 10-yard line in the opening period, but there the Eagles held, and Scalzi's attempted drop-kick from the 20-yard line went wide shortly after the second period started. B. C. scored when Colbert intercepted a Georgetown pass on the Georgetown 38-yard line, and on the next play tossed a 20-yard pass to Antos, who raced the rest of the distance unhindered for the score. Yodsleya failed to kick the extra point.

Bozek returned the opening kick-off of the second half to his 44-yard line and the Hilltoppers unleashed an attack that would not be denied. The running game carried to the Eagle 25-yard line, where Scalzi tossed a lateral to Bozek for 16 yards and a first down on the 9-yard line. On the second play, Bozek arched a short pass over the line to Scalzi, who ran 8 yards for the score and put his team into the lead by drop-kicking the extra point.

Five minutes later, B. C. recaptured the lead, when Bozek was forced to punt from behind his goal. Dixon

By LATHROP MACK.

Municipal Stadium, Baltimore, Md., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Ohio State rose to its full height today and defeated Navy 27 to 0, playing almost perfect football and winning its most important intersectional victory in many years.

Victory was sweet to the Buckeyes, who had lost to Northwestern and Michigan and had been tied by Wisconsin in the Western Conference in the last three games. Seeking their first victory of the year over a foe of their own caliber, they overpowered an overrated Navy team, scoring in every period and showing superiority in every department of play.

Poor Work by Navy Hurts.

It was Navy's poor passing, Navy's fumbling and Navy's poor pass defense which accounted for the four Ohio touchdowns, plus Ohio's smoother, harder running attack and keener defense.

The versatile Buckeye attack was engineered by Wesley Fesler, all-American end, who was acting captain, signal caller, punter, passer, ball carrier and ight end on defense, all in one.

Navy took the first kick-off but had to punt. Off-tackle plays from double-wing back formation carried the ball to Navy's 23-yard line.

The second period was nearly over when Half Back Johnny Gannon, of the Navy, fumbled on his own 27-yard line on a bad lateral pass.

Hinchman Snares Navy Pass.

The punting duel was resumed in the third period, but Navy tried a pass, Hagberg to Byng, deep in its own territory and the result was costly. Hinchman took the ball off Byng's finger tips and raced 25 yards for a touchdown, with big Bob Haubrich kicking goal from placement.

Ohio then adopted an ultraconservative policy, Fesler once choosing to punt on fourth down with only inches to gain in Navy's territory. It paid big dividends as Navy became more desperate. Bob Grady, a fast Ohio substitute half back, intercepted Gannon's pass and ran to Navy's 30-yard line before being tackled. Line

U. S. Consulate Jeered By Reds in Tampico

Tampico, Mexico, Nov. 8 (A.P.). Thirty-three Communists, including four women, were under arrest today as the result of a demonstration before the American consulate last night.

The Reds, observing the thirteenth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolutions, paraded before the consulate and attacked the United States Government, Mexican authorities and the press. The names of Sacco and Vanzetti, whose execution by Massachusetts authorities in 1927 aroused widespread Communist protests, were shouted frequently.

Police also raided offices of the Workers' Federation of Tamaulipas, charging that it was dominated by Communists and other extremists.

METHODISTS WARN G.O.P. TO STAY DRY

Britten, However, Believes Party Must Meet Wet Sentiment.

WOODCOCK IS SUPPORTED

(Associated Press.)

The Hoover administration "will rise or fall with the success of its efforts to enforce" prohibition, the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals said yesterday, adding it believed "success should be apparent within the next year or eighteen months."

This statement was made in the course of an indorsement of Prohibition Director Woodcock's request for 500 additional agents and an increased appropriation.

"The Republican party has no alternative but to enforce prohibition and to stand by the principle," the board said. "For them, suggestion of repeal or of 'modification' is impossible for the simple reason that men and women with burning determination that the law should be enforced put that party into power.

"Col. Woodcock ought to have his additional men and he ought to have his additional money, and every man of the additional 500 ought to be dry, very, very dry. They ought to be men with a dry background, men with long years of personal total abstinence behind them."

(Associated Press.)

The assertion that unless the Volstead act was modified within the next two years President Hoover and the Republican party would meet defeat at the next presidential election was made yesterday by Representative Britten (Republican), Illinois, an opponent of prohibition.

"President Hoover," the Illinois member said, "would please the country at large and do much to bring back prosperity to the farmers if he would see to it that the Wickersham Law Enforcement Commission reported favorably for modification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer. He should take a firm stand for modification."

Britten said Tuesday's election increased the "number of wets in the House by 40, clearly indicating that the people of the country are tired of the prohibition farce that has made beer barons and rum runners fabulously wealthy and a menace to the Nation." The referenda in Illinois, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, Britten said, "clearly demonstrates the people are tired of this noble experiment."

PETITION ASKS PENSION FUNDS PROVIDE LOANS

Treasury Workers Seek to Defeat Usurers by Plan.

WILL ASK CONGRESS FOR REVISION OF LAW

Retirement Money Would Grow Under Provision, They Claim.

ACTION IS RESULT OF POST ARTICLES

Senator and Representative Tentatively Agree to Sponsor Bill.

Provisions whereby Federal employes' retirement funds are made available for loan purposes will be sought when Congress reconvenes, as a move to overcome the conditions under which innumerable government workers have fallen into the clutches of loan sharks.

The plan originated among employes of the Treasury Department, where a petition is being drawn up for circulation among all Government employes, requesting Congress to revise the law so that such funds can be loaned to employes before their retirement.

This action, according to leaders in the movement, was a direct result of the recent series of articles published in The Post regarding the activities of loan sharks in Washington, in which it was revealed that numerous Government employes are reaping golden harvests by lending money to their fellow workers at usurious and illegal rates.

Rate of One Per Cent.

Under the laws of the District, as embodied in the loan shark act of 1913, the maximum interest and other charges which may legally be collected from borrowers is 1 per cent a month.

It is believed by the sponsors of the proposed lending provision that despite the fact that this rate admittedly would not permit a reasonable rate of profit for private lenders, it would show a profit to the retirement fund which at present has an idle surplus which can be touched for no other purpose than to pay pensions of retired Government workers.

While this profit would not be large, it would be more than enough to pay expenses entailed in making the loans, sponsors of the movement claim, and thus would be in some measure not only serve to assist temporarily needy employes, but would also swell the retirement fund.

Two Lawmakers Agree.

It is understood that a representative and a senator already have agreed tentatively to introduce such modification at the coming session, but that they have given no decisive answer to the employes pending dis-

1932 STIRS SPECULATION

By CARLISLE BARGERON.

With the roar of Tuesday's big guns now dimmed to the sporadic firing of those widely scattered groups that are still embattled, the generals of both the Republican and Democratic forces have turned to a final survey of the blood-strewn field, the Republicans to count their killed and maimed and the Democrats to measure their gains.

Overturns that may come from the pending recounts will not appreciably change the result. They may give the numerical majority of the House to the Democrats by two or so votes, or perhaps leave the Republicans in theoretical control by the same score, or finally make it a tie.

The result, insofar as the country generally is concerned, is known.

Briefly here is what it is:

The Democrats captured nine additional senatorial seats—Massachusetts, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado, Kansas and South Dakota. They lost one—Iowa.

They captured approximately 50 House seats, scattered over some 19 States from Connecticut to Oregon, their greatest gains coming from that center of disturbance, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Ohio and Kentucky.

Of the 33 gubernatorial contests they captured 17, the Republicans 16, Farmer-Laborites, 1; Independent, 1. Three are still undetermined, including Kansas, where the Democrats are in the lead.

Of the seventeen Democratic victories seven will replace Republican governors — Arizona, Connecticut, Idaho, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Mexico and Ohio. An Independent won in Oregon and a Farmer-Laborite

SURVEY CITES NEED OF TOURIST BUREAU

Trade Board Report Also Says Red Tape Burdens Washington.

CITY'S ADVANTAGES TOLD

Depicting in graphic form the advantages and handicaps of the National Capital, a 56-page survey of Washington and its environs will be released in book form tomorrow by the Washington Board of Trade.

The survey was compiled by a corps of statisticians and other workers under the direction of Rufus S. Luck. Seven months were consumed in assembling the material.

Included in the survey is every phase of activity within a 30-mile radius of Washington, as well as in the District of Columbia itself. Descriptions in the book vary from topography and climatic conditions to financial, social and recreational features and to business, statistics, cost of living and transportation facilities.

The purpose of the survey is to give a reference work to business men and those interested in the National Capital and its environs. For every advantage set down there is an accompanying disadvantage. The advantages, the survey managers point out, should be encouraged, while the disadvantages should be remedied.

Preeminent in the favorable aspects described is the fact that the National Capital and its environs in the last 20 years have evidenced a steady growth along healthy and normal lines both as to wealth and population. It is a community, the survey points out, in which definite development plans of the highest type and along scientific lines have been laid out, assuring its future as the most beautiful capital in the world.

Coupled with this asset is the criticism that Washington "deplorably lacks proper coordination for the handling of convention business and tourists." Washington, the survey

PLANS TO ASK CONGRESS FOR SPECIAL FUND

UNDECIDED UPON SIZE OF AMOUNT REQUIRED

Sum Will Depend Chiefly Upon Extent of Work Now Laid Out.

POSTOFFICE PROJECT HERE MAY BE AIDED

Construction of $4,000,000 Addition Might Begin Without Delay.

President Hoover will ask Congress for a special emergency appropriation to speed up the Federal building program and thus provide further employment in the coming year, it was announced at the White House late yesterday.

The President, it was said, also will recommend that money be loaned to farmers in the drought area so they may be able to buy seeds and fertilizer.

The emergency appropriation will be sought as an addition to the $500,000,000 already appropriated this fiscal year for public buildings, river and harbor projects, Army and Navy structures and the like. How large an emergency fund will be requested, however, was not made known.

Desires Early Start.

The amount, it was said at the White House, will be determined on the basis of authorized public works for which preliminary technical preparations have been or can be completed.

What the President desires is to get an early start on Federal projects which Congress has authorized, but for which money ordinarily would not be appropriated until later.

No specific work was mentioned by the President, but a local project might be cited as an example. At the last session of Congress, a bill was enacted authorizing construction of a $4,000,000 addition to the City Postoffice. The bill, however, simply "authorized" the expenditure of $4,000,000; it did not appropriate that sum.

Might Expedite Work.

If the plans can be prepared in time, it is possible part of the emergency fund will be used to start work on the postoffice addition much earlier than was contemplated. The result would be additional jobs for mechanics and laborers here.

The statement given out by George Akerson, secretary to the President, follows:

"The President announced today that the administration had decided to recommend to Congress a special emergency appropriation, to be applied to the further intensification of public works, public buildings and other forms of Federal construction which are already authorized by Congress but for which no appropriations would normally be made until later periods; and further to recommend the provision of a "seed loan" assistance to farmers in the drought area.

Were Greatly Increased.

"It will be remembered that the appropriations for Federal construction were greatly increased, upon the President's recommendation, by the last Congress as an aid to employment during the current year. The departments were also authorized to undertake necessary technical preparation for future construction work.

Butts to Describe Drinking In Senate Office Building

Youthful Secret Dry Agent Will Tell Post Readers of Methods He Used to Check Rum Supply of Legislators and to Nab Cassiday.

Roger Butts, the youthful undercover agent of the Prohibition Bureau, who was responsible for trapping "The Man in the Green Hat" and obtaining the list of senators and representatives who were customers of the notorious bootlegger of Capitol Hill, will tell the story of his activities in a series of articles to begin in The Washington Post on Tuesday.

The young man, who has been the cause for much concern on the part of members of Congress since Vice President Curtis revealed that a prohibition agent was used to check their liquor purchases, has just been located in a small town at the entrance of the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia.

Since leaving the Prohibition Bureau with excellent recommendations he has been working as an accountant. He agreed to relate the details of his experiences in snooping on senators only when assured that he was under no obligation to withhold his story.

The Vice President arranged that Butts, then only 20 years old, should be employed about four months in the Senate stationery room. His real job, however, was to watch closely the movements of George L. Cassiday and to make regular reports to the prohibition bureau.

So secretive was his task, he now admits, that even his "girl" did not know he was a special dry agent.

This young man belied his years in the manner in which he went about discovering bootlegging activities on Capitol Hill.

With the cleverness of a veteran sleuth he gained the confidences of employes in the Senate Office Building and gained entry into senators' rooms.

The story of this youth's detective work under the very noses of the legislators and the manner in which he outwitted their bootlegger makes interesting reading.

Rum Forecasts Held Purely Conjectural

Wickersham Says Commission Has Not Completed Its Report and That He Does Not Know When It Will Do So.

(Associated Press.)

Any forecasts of what the Law Enforcement Commission may recommend in its forthcoming report on prohibition were described by Chairman Wickersham yesterday as "purely conjectural." At the same time he said that the commission had reached no conclusions which were ready for publication and that it could not say when the report will be submitted.

Revival of a rumor that the commission would recommend modification of the prohibition laws to permit the sale of 2.75 beer yesterday caused a heavy increase in inquiries made at headquarters of the commission.

Mr. Wickersham's statement was issued at the close of the day but previously Judge Kenneth MacIntosh, a commission member, had described the report as a "guess."

"The attention of the commission has been called to various articles in different newspapers purporting to forecast when the report on prohibition of this commission will be made and what its recommendations will be," the statement said. "The commission has reached no conclusions which are ripe for publication at the present time. It can not state when its report will be ready. There are certain phases of investigation which the commission has not yet completed.

"Its report, when completed, will be sent to the President. Any public announcement concerning it must come from him. Any statements in advance as to the content of the report or the recommendations made are purely conjectural."

The commission will resume its sessions Wednesday.

Police Claim Confession By Alleged Torch Slayer

Jersey City Inspector Says That Howard Swavely Admits He Set Fire to Mate's Clothing; Former Wife Charges Policy Plot.

Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Police Inspector Harry Walsh said tonight that Howard Swavely, 55, had confessed to killing his wife, Elizabeth, yesterday by setting fire to her clothing.

Walsh said the confession came after a woman claiming to be Swavely's undivorced first wife identified the man as her husband. She asserted that he had served a year in a Pennsylvania prison after conviction on charges of conspiring to kill her and collect $2,500 insurance money.

Before she died the victim accused Swavely of setting her on fire "because he was hungry for my money." The woman was said to be insured for $10,000 against accidental death. Swavely, however, said that she had been drinking the night before and that her clothes had accidentally caught on fire from a gas stove. He had maintained his innocence in the face of discovery by police of what they said was a pint flask containing a liquid believed to be gasoline in the furnished room where Swavely and his wife lived. The contents of the bottle were sent for analysis to a chemist.

The flask was found in a closet near a packed suitcase believed to be Swavely's.

Philadelphia, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Howard M. Swavely, reported in Jersey City to have confessed to killing his wife, Elizabeth, by setting fire to her clothing, is believed by Philadelphia police to be the same man who served time here for an alleged plot to kill his former wife in this city. Mrs. Lena Swavely, 55, told Captain of Detectives Andrew Emanuel that she was convinced that the man held in Jerwhich was authorized but not appropriated for.

As a result of appropriations available during the present fiscal year, the construction work of all kinds in the Federal Government will be increased to a total exceeding $500,000,000.

The emergency appropriation that will be requested will be in the nature of an addition to this already enlarged program, and will be in anticipation of such construction work as would normally have taken place a year or two hence.

Technical Work Done.

"The necessary technical preparation has been underway for some months and has now been advanced so that the programs can be further expanded for emergency purposes. The precise amount for the emergency appropriation has not yet been decided upon, but will be determined on a basis of authorized works for which the preliminary technical preparation has been or can be completed.

In the last four years, Congress has authorized appropriations totaling $40,000,000 for the purchase of land, and $150,000,000 for the construction of Federal buildings on those sites—all of them in the District of Columbia. These are strictly buildings to house the various departments of the Federal Government.

Three have been completed or virtually finished—the central building of the Department of Agriculture, the Commercee Department Building and the Internal Revenue Building.

Laid Out Big Program.

The second deficiency bill passed at the last session of Congress authorized the supervising architect of the Treasury to contract for construction of seven more buildings and the remodeling of another. Buildings to be erected and the amounts authorized are as follows:

Archives building, $8,750,000; Interstate Commerce or General Accounting Office building, $4,500,000; Department of Justice building, $10,000,000; Department of Labor building, $4,750,000; building connecting the Labor and Interstate Commerce buildings, $2,000,000; Postoffice building, $10,300,000, and Public Health Service building, $865,000.

Provides for Remodeling.

The bill also authorized $3,000,000 for remodeling the State, War and Navy building, to make it conform architecturally with the Treasury building.

In addition to all this, there is an entirely separate building program on Capitol Hill, calling for a new Supreme Court building, an addition to the House Office building, a new wing for the Senate Office building, an addition to the Library of Congress and extension of the Capitol grounds to the Union Station.

Secretary Hurley, of the War Department, announced yesterday its cooperation in the drive to relieve the unemployment situation by provision of all available army cots and blankets for cases of acute distress.

Will Lend Equipment.

The Secretary personally has assumed responsibility for issuing army equipment for this purpose. Such action followed a telegraphic request from Gov. Emmerson, of Illinois, for the loan of such equipment, to be used in Chicago and throughout the State.

Col. Arthur Woods, director of President Hoover's committee on unemployment, called attention yesterday to what he termed futile migrations of labor. He also made public an announcement by L. J. Drake, president of the Union Tank Car Co., that his concern intended to place orders for repair supplies for six months provided it is guaranteed against price declines.

A report from Jacob Billikopf, chairman of the Committee of 100 in Philadelphia, said Sears, Roebuck & Co. had launched a plan among its employes which probably would raise from $600,000 to $1,000,000 for relief work.

Urges Immediate Relief.

Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, issued a warning yesterday that relief must be speeded if the children of the country are not to suffer.

"We must get the children out of the bread lines and no child must suffer from hunger in the United States," she said.

The bureau is assembling statistics on public and private relief from all the cities in the country having more than 50,000 population.

Brooklyn Mutiny Quelled by Police

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The Chinese and Lascar crew of the British freighter Iris Bank mutinied and attacked three engineers as the ship lay at its Brooklyn berth today.

Six men were injured and Second Engineeer John Morton was taken to a hospital with serious head injuries. Police borke up the mutiny.

The Iris Bank, a motorship of 3,000 tons, owned by Andrew Weir, of London, was scheduled to sail for Oriental ports at noon. Shortly before that time Capt. Ernest Blackmar went ashore, and the crew, enraged at what they considered discrimination in food rations, crowded into the enginneroom, where Chief Dean, Henry Jessy, first assistant, and Morton were at work and attacked them.

Threee of the crew were knocked unconscious before the engineers were overwhelmed.

Missionary and Son Are Killed in Brazil

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Officials of the Inland South American Missionary Union, anonunced tonight that Arthur Tylee, their representative at Juruena, Brazil, and his 2-year-old son, Dave, had been killed in an automobile accident.

Dr. Kenneth Mackenzie, president of the union, said he had received a cable from the Rev. John Hay, founder of the union, from Posodas, Argentina, telling of the accident. Mrs. Ethel Tylee, wife of the missionary, was injured. Mr. Tylee was a former resident of Worcester, Mass., and his wife is believed to be a native of Tennessee.

Hawks May Take Off For New York Today

Havana, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Possibility that the attempt by Capt. Frank Hawks to establish a new record between Havana and New York again would be postponed, loomed today as the flier remained uncertain whether or not he would take off tomorrow as scheduled.

If weather conditions are favorable, the captain intneds to start shortly after 5 o'clock in the morning, refuel at Miami, Fla., and again at Columbia, S. C., and try to be in New York by 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

DELANO WILL HEAD EMPLOYMENT GROUP

WOODS TO ASSIST WORK

The unemployment situation in Washington is to be dealt with by a committee headed by Frederic A. Delano, who was appointed yesterday by the District Commissioners to head a group which he is to name to study and act upon conditions.

Coincidently dates were announced for the opening of bids on almost $2,000,000 worth of school construction as a move by the District to provide additional employment. In this lot was included $10,000 for new wharves.

This action was taken during an extra-session conference of the Commissioners yesterday. Mr. Delano is to prepare by tomorrow a list of names of various persons representing the different trade, labor, religious and civic organizations whom he wishes to have serve on the committee. He will confer with the Commissioners early this week on the final personnel of this body.

Will Open Headquarters.

Space for an office for headquarters of the committee has been offered to Mr. Delano by the Commissioners who will apportion quarters in the District Building and also supply such clerical help as may be needed for proper functioning of the body. These workers will be drawn from the various departments of the District government where they can be spared temporarily. All general policies of operation are to be determined by the committee after its organization.

Col. Arthur Woods, chairman of President Hoover's emergency unemployment committee, yesterday replied to the Commissioners' letter asking his suggestions as to the organization and functions of an unemployment body. Col. Woods told the District officials that he would delegate John B. Blandford as his representative to confer with them.

While Col. Woods did not inform the Commissioners when they might expect to hear from Mr. Blandford it was presumed that he would confer with them some time before the formation of the committee to be headed by Mr. Delano, so that his suggestions might be incorporated in organization of that group.

Others at Conference.

Closeted with Mr. Delano and the Commissioners yesterday were Dr. George C. Havenner, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations; Rudolph Jose, president of the Washington Chamber of Commerce; Dr. Charles P. McNeil; E. C. Graham, of the Washington Board of Trade; C. Melvin Sharpe, assistant to the president of the Washington Railway & Electric Co., and John P. Colpoys, of the Central Labor Union.

Dr. Havenger offered the Commissioners the support of the federation in any move to relieve the unemployment situation. He also stated that the federation was prepared to support the previously suggested loan of $25,000,000 from the Federal Government to the District for use in speeding work on several large construction projects for which plans are now ready.

In this connection it was announced yesterday that bids will be opened soon for construction work amounting to almost $2,000,000.

Plans for McKinley.

Of this amount, $375,000 will be for sodding, seeding and planting at McKinley High School site; a new eight-room school building in Wesley Heights; a new eight-room school building at Broad Branch road and Northampton street northwest, and for a new athletic field at Western High School, it was stated by Roland M. Brennan, chief clerk of the Engineer Department.

Bids for the McKinley job are to be opened November 18; for the Wesley Heights School, December 3; for the Broad Branch building, December 5, and for the athletic field, December 8.

On November 12 bids will be opened for the new Roosevelt Business High School, authorized by Congress, to cost $1,500,000, Mr. Brennan said.

PRESIDENT SPEAKS OVER VAST HOOK-UP

DEPLORES INDUSTRIAL W

Industrial conflict is the greatest waste in business, declared President Hoover last night in an address made from the White House over one of the most gigantic radio hook-ups ever attempted.

His message was made directly to employes of the H. J. Heinz Co., of Pittsburgh, assembled at banquets throughout the United States, Canada, England, Spain, South Africa and Australia, to signalize 61 years of uninterrupted amity within the organization.

President Hoover's address was received as the feature of a dinner staged at the Washington Hotel by employes of the Washington branch of the company, with short talks by William J. Mitchell, branch manager, and the Rev. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor of the Memorial Lutheran Church.

Pittsburgh Theater Dedicated.

The principal gathering was held at Pittsburgh, where the Heinz Co.'s new theater and recreation building was dedicated with the address by President Hoover and a program there, marked by addresses by Howard Heinz, president of the company; Sir Henry Worth Thornton, head of the Canadian National Railways, and Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor in the Taft administration.

The President prefaced his remarks on industrial peace, taking as his example the unmarred service record of the company, by referring to his cordial friendship with Mr. Heinz. The President's address follows:

"It is a pleasure to participate for a few moments in this tribute to Mr. Heinz from his employes throughout the world. His association with me in service during the war and many times since when I have summoned him from his business to undertake public service gives me a right to be in spirit among those who join in this occasion.

"It is also a satisfaction to engage for a moment in the anniversary of the establishment which has a record of over 60 years of continuous industrial peace. This long history is proof that there is common ground of mutual interest and humane relations between employer and employe, for this concern could not have weathered all these years of shifting currents in good times and bad times had it been otherwise.

Man Greatest of Machines.

"And year by year do we realize more of our responsibilities in the human relations within industry. Mechanization is so distinctive of our modern civilization that even as a mechanical conception we often tend to forget that the most wonderful and powerful machine in the world is the men and women themselves. It is the human being from which achievement is won far more than the tool.

"However astonishing may be the increase in usefulness of machines as they grow in size and ingenuity, their improvement is little as compared with the enlarged effectiveness of organized intelligence and cooperation when men pool their efforts to achieve a common end. Man's conquest of machines is less spectacular than his conquest of his own will.

"To build up and preserve unbroken a cooperative spirit between a great group of employers and employes for two long generations is a cheering proof of the possibilities of human nature. The secret of it is more important to mankind than any secret of trade or any new invention.

Key to Problem Simple.

"Fortunately there is nothing mysterious about it, nothing patentiable or exclusive, nothing that is not free to be used by all. The key to it is as old as the religions we profess. Its origins and its power lie in generations of education and scientific research, in the benignant forces of mutual good will, the spirit of mutual helpfulness, the virtues of patience and toleration and understanding. This spirit of accommodation has won all of the ultimate victories in history.

"Wars between nations, wars between groups within nations, industrial conflicts, all end in what appears to be victory for one of the contenders, but the real victory arrives only after the battle has been forgotten and when the human nature of both sides meets in cheerful agreement upon a common solution.

"Industrial conflict is the greatest waste in industry. It not only delays production and diminishes it, but its most hurtful results are inflicted upon the lives and spirits of men and women. We can measure its productive losses in unmade goods and unearned dollars, but incalculable is its needless toll of suffering.

Seeks Joy in Work.

"Moreover, the purpose of industry is only in part to create objects, articles and services which satisfy physical needs. This is an essential function; but the higher purpose of industry is to provide satisfactions of life to human beings not alone in its products but in the work of production itself. Unless industry makes living men and women and children happier in their work, unless it gives opportunity and creative satisfactions in the job itself, it can not excuse its failure by pleading that at least it has kept them alive. Man learned the art of staying alive long before he learned the art of mechanics. The machine must build him a better life, not alone in time of leisure but in joy of work, than he knew before. I have every faith that in the broad view it is doing so, not only in its products and relief from sweat, but that it increasingly enlarges man's satisfaction in his toil.

"I congratulate you most heartily upon the part that you have all played in the task of subordinating the mechanism of industry to the well-being of the men and women who operate it. This experience may not be universal. It it were, the world would be wealthier in spirit by the incaloulable enrichments of human happiness."

Fake Woman Solicitor For Mission Denounced

Washingtonians are being victimized by a young woman soliciting for the Central Union Mission, Superintendent John S. Bennett warned last night. According to a report made to him by Stephen H. Talkes, secretary of the Retail Credit Men of Washington, Mr. Bennet said, this young woman has been soliciting money and merchandise supposedly for the mission in various neighborhoods of the city.

"The Central Union Mission has no solicitors and any one using the name of the mission for this purpose is doing so without authority," Mr. Bennet said.

300,000 LIST NAMES FOR JOBS IN CHICAGO

MOTHERS ASK FOR FOOD

Chicago, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Chicago's legion of unemployed—a cross section of artistic, professional and industrial life—marched 300,000 strong into 350 public schools today and registered their needs, that Gov. Emerson's unemployment commission might work out their relief.

esperate were the needs of many of them for food, for rent money, but to the last man and woman they wanted work—"just anything."

From all classes and ages they came to sign up in this registration, unprecedented in the history of any big American city. The majority were men, coming mainly from the laboring and industrial groups, but there were many women—mothers, and women with dependents.

Every age, from the 11-year-old lad in tattered trousers and torn sweater—nothing more—to the white-haired, 70-year-old man of soldierly bearing, who was graduated from Bonn University, in Germany, was there.

7,000 Teachers Give Aid.

Seven thousand teachers gave up their Saturday holiday to help with the work. When they arrived at their buildings this morning they found from 50 to 600 men, women and children gravely waiting. As the hours went by the lines lengthened.

For the most part the registration was orderly. The police kept the lines trim. Only a few times were they compelled to exert their authority. Once a "flivver squad" was called out when murmurs of a dangerous tone rumbled through the crowd at one school entrance. In the main they were a self-respecting group.

The seriousness of the situation hushed the registrants and workers alike. It was painfully quiet.

There were college-trained folks in the lines. One was a 26-year-old commercial artist from Purdue University. Another youth, an engineer, said he had been rather particular when he first hunted work, but:

"Bus I'll take anything now—just anything," he said.

A 23-year-old girl, who had had one year at college, gave as the address for herself and her 3-year-old son, the Hyde Park Police Station, where she had obtained temporary shelter.

Mothers Bring Children.

Many mothers had their children with them. Some carried babies in their arms. It was they especially who found the registration a cold affair. They wanted food, milk, rent money. Several were tearful. To others the story of poverty was too old.

One was a young widow, whose clothes had known many years and possibly several owners. She cried and begged for milk and food for the four children she had with her.

In contrast, there were two young women in fur coats. But they, too, were anxious-eyed, for they were out of work. Of course, there are pawnshops——

DO-X May Wait Weather Change

Giant Airplane Is Fueled at Amsterdam for Hop to England.

Amsterdam, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Germany's great flying boat, the Do-X, was loaded with fuel today for a flight to Southampton, but late tonight it appeared there was little chance of the twelve-motored plane leaving for the English city tomorrow.

The new delay in prospect was brought about by the forecast of another storm in the English Channel, over which disturbances have brewed for a week.

Officers and crew of the great craft, which intends to fly to the United States some time this month, were instructed to board the ship at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning, nevertheless, and the passengers were asked to be ready at 9 in case the weather cleared.

De Molay Drive Aims To End Dances Early

Kansas City, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Seeking to relieve parental anxiety, the Order of De Molay tonight announced the beginning of a Nation-wide movement advocating the ending at midnight of all dances hereafter sponsored by its chapters and other organizations of youths.

All of the De Molay chapters in more than 1,350 cities will be asked to comply with the request made by Frank S. Land, founder and head of the international organization for boys between 16 and 21 years old.

Pair of Stock Brokers Convicted in Toronto

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—A jury today found Malcolm Stobie and J. F. Forlong, stock brokers, guilty of conspiracy to defraud the public. Gordon Draper, a third stock broker, was acquitted of similar charges.

W. N. Tilley, special prosecutor, charged that the accused were short $7,500,000 to their customers.

CONSCRIPTION CURB BEATEN AT GENEVA

League Commission, However, Favors Limit on Time Served in Ranks.

LITVINOFF'S JIBES BITTER

Geneva, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Count von Bernstorff's proposal to limit the number of army conscripts called to the colors each year by parties to the League of Nations preparatory disarmament conference was rejected by the commission today. Approval, however, was voted for an alternative principle for limitation of the period of conscript service.

Only five nations supported the German recommendation — Russia, China, Sweden, Norway and Holland. The United States, Great Britain and Canada, while not voting, were understood to approve the proposal in substance although they believed it useless to attempt to force such limitation on States which rely upon conscription for their military defense forces.

May Renew Proposal.

France, Italy, Japan, Poland, Jugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Roumania and other states adhering to the conscript system stood solidly against Von Bernstorff's proposal. The German delegate took his defeat philosophically, contenting himself with reserving Germany's right to renew its efforts toward conscript limitation when a general conference is called.

There was a general agreement on the need for limiting the period of conscript service, but there arose difference of opinion as to the methods by which this could be achieved.

Great Britain and Poland proposed that the limit should be the same for all parties to the conference. The French delegate, feared such a system might conflict with economic, social and political conditions in some States. Most of the others favored a common maximum, but the issue was still under discussion when today's session adjourned.

Litvinoff Continues Jibes.

Maxim Litvinoff, the Russian delegate, continued to fling satirical jibes at the commission today, apologizing at one point for having mentioned disarmament—a word, he intimated, which was totally inappropriate to the work and aims of the commission's members.

A subcommittee has not yet settled the question of whether the category of naval officers should be limited, as is desired by France, and today's meeting failed to dispose of the article dealing with trained reserves.

When this issue is settled, probably next week, the commission will move on to articles dealing with limitation of war materials, first on land, then at sea, and finally in the air. The second point would bring before the conferees the results of the London Naval Conference.

Woman Dead in Penury Leaves Small Fortune

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—When Mary Tringle called to pay her daily visit today to Mary Campbell, her 70-year-old friend, she found the woman's body in a chair near the stove and the apartment filled with gas.

Although Miss Campbell was dressed in old clothes and had lived in apparent poverty, police discovered bankbooks showing deposits of several thousand dollars. Miss Tringle said her friend was a sister of the late Timothy Campbell, once Representative and a Democratic leader on the East Side.

THAMES THREATENS LOW LONDON AREA

RAINFALL IS PERSISTING

London, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The sluggish Thames, swollen by persistent rains, threatened the low-lying sections of London tonight; the Seine, overflowing her banks, was causing concern in Paris; the River Oder was higher at Frankfort than at any time since 1854 and throughout Central Europe the authorities were vigilant to prevent loss of life and property by menacing floods.

Not since the winter of 1929, when melting snows sent flood waters pouring through France, Germany, Belgium and the Balkans, has the danger appeared so real as now in the wake of the terrific gales, which swept England and the continent last week.

At high tide today the Thames rose to its highest level since the disastrous floods of 1928 and at Putney and Rotherite the river overflowed. Basement dwellers were warned to be ready to evacuate quickly, but no serious damage was reported at any point. The next high tide will come tomorrow afternoon.

Paris Press Prints Warning.

In Paris the newspapers published pictures of flooded quays and warned that should the rains continue for a few days the situation might become critical.

Police and firemen were installing powerful pumping apparatus at points where the Seine was within 6 inches of flood. The rain continued as they worked.

Precautions have been taken at Frankfort, where the danger of a flood first became apparent several days ago.

Meantime meteorological stations reported a great low pressure area extending from the Azores to the Bay of Biscay, with prospects for a rough week-end in the channel.

The weather report held the German seaplane DO-X at Amsterdam, delaying her flight to Calshot on the second stage of a flight to New York via Lisbon, the Azores and Bermuda.

Water In Paris Subways.

Paris, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Flood waters from the swollen Seine were reported seeping into the underground tracks at both the Orsay and Invalides railway stations tonight and the prefect of the department of the Seine issued instructions that police and firemen were to take all precautionary measures enacted after the disastrous floods of 1910 and 1924.

All traffic on the river has been stopped, wharves are under water on both sides of the stream and at some points pumping stations began to operate this afternoon.

Precautions were taken to protect the huge wine warehouse on the Bercy wharf, where 15,000 hogsheads of wine are stored, but no damage to private dwellings had been reported tonight.

TWO WAVES STRIKE SHIP; 17 MEN DROWN

TANKER PINNED ON ROCK

Eureka, Calif., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The Coast Guard life-saving station here reported tonight the steam lumber schooner Brooklyn turned over and sank while crossing Humboldt Bar at the entrance of the harbor late today. It was believed the seventeen men of her crew were all drowned.

The Brooklyn was hit simultaneously by two mountainous waves, the Coast Guard said, blew her whistle and within five minutes had sunk. Several Humboldt Bay fishing boats and Coast Guard life-saving boats were searching for bodies, but none had been found an hour after the ship sank.

San Francisco, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Pinned by a jagged rock to Pescadero Reef, 50 miles south of here, the tanker Tamiahua was to be abandoned by her crew of 39 at 3 a. m. tomorrow.

A breeches buoy was rigged up today to take off the crew when repeated efforts of tugs and a Coast Guard cutter had failed to budge the tanker. The early morning hour was chosen as the most expeditious as the tide will be low, lessening possibilities of mishap as the sailors are dragged through the surf.

The crew has remained aboard ever since the tanker grounded on the bleak coast in a dense fog Thursday night. A jagged rock which penetrated 8 feet into her hold made efforts to refloat her virtually hopeless.

"Count" Held at Island On Deportation Warrant

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Dechow von Buelow, divorced husband of Mrs. Lottie Brenner von Buelow, of Chicago, was held at Ellis Island today on a deportation warrant charging he had obtained the visa on which he entered this country in an irregular manner.

Von Buelow, who called himself "Count" in Chicago, will be given a hearing next week and if found guilty will be deported. He was arrested on orders from Washington as he was visiting his cousin, Miss Frieda Mierse, a show girl and New York's candidate for "Miss America" at the 1927 Atlantic City beauty show.

LARGEST SCHOONER SINKS; CREW SAVED

Freighter Upshur, Whose Radio Called Rescuers, Seeks Aid Vainly.

STORM SNAPS TOWLINE

West Palm Beach, Fla., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Rescued shortly before their schooner sank in a raging sea, the crew of the four-masted Dunham Wheeler was en route tonight to New York aboard the steamer Astec. A call for help sent by the freighter Upshur, herself riding at anchor in distress, made possible the rescue.

Her masts tripped of canva and with no radio, the Dunham Wheeler, wallowing in high waves off Cape Canaveral, sent up distress flares. Luckily the Upshur wasb riding sea anchors nearby.

Forty-six miles away the steamer Astec, en route from the West Indies to New York, heard the Upshur's call and steamed to the rescue. The Dunham Wheeler, its crew safe, soon foundered.

Not long after the Astec steamed away the steamer George W. Barnes, also answering the distress call, appeared, but finding the schooner's crew safe, took the Upshur in tow for Jacksonville. The Upshur previously had been cut loose from the Coast Guard cutter Nansemond because of the high waves. Later the radio marine corporation station here was advised that this second attempt to tow the Upshur had failed because the tow line parted. The Upshur again had to cast her sea anchors. The George W. Barnes continued to stand by.

Meanwhile the Coast Guard cutter Yamacraw and tug McCauley were expected to arrive shortly to aid the Upshur. The Dunham Wheeler was said in shipping circles here to have been the largest American coastwise schooner.

FACTIONAL FIGHTING IS FEARED IN BRAZIL

Vargas May Not Have Easy Time in Organization of New Regime.

SOLDIERS FILL CAPITAL

(Copyright, 1930, by the Associated Press.)

Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Travelers recently arriving from Brazil assert that Dr. Getulio Vargas, who took over the government of Brazil Monday following upon a successful revolution, may not have an easy path in the future.

Many persons in Rio de Janeiro, it was said, fear fighting between different factions which have brought their troops into the federal capital.

It is understood that when fighting ceased Dr. Vargas told the rebel generals to take their men home from the fronts occupied, but the officers said that they had promised their men victorious entry to Rio de Janeiro and hence would march there.

Even before Dr. Vargas arrived at Rio d eJaneiro to take over the provisional government, several contingents of southern gaucho soldiers had reach the capital. Others have been coming since, from northern and southern states by boat and from Minas Geraes by train. Observers estimate that 20,000 now are in the city.

Southern revolutionists have a large showing in the provisional cabinet, cabinet, but the north is not represented except for Capt. Juarez Tavora as minister of communications, while Minas Geraes has only one place also.

The revolt was engineered chiefly in the southern State of Rio Grande do Sul, but broke out simultaneously in Minas Geraes, Juarez Tavora at the same time took over the operations in the north and eventually claimed nine states.

Hence, political observers say, the different factions are quarreling over preference, and trouble is predicted unless they are satisfied by November 15, when the official presidential term begins.

The Listening Post

By CARLISLE BARGERON

IT would not be surprising if friction developed between the Progressives and the Democrats in the Senate now that the latter are so strong in their own right.

They need a couple of Progressive votes or one of them and that of Senator Shipstead, to pass any bills and quite likely will be able to get them at any time. But it is not unlikely that the coalition as the compact machine that it was, will cease to exist.

The truth of the matter is that the Progressives have been the leaders in the coalition herstofore. They have set the pace and maneuvered the Democrats into such a position that they could not break away.

* * * *

THEY will probably insist upon this leadership in the future as the price of their continued friendliness and it is questionable whether it is a price that the Democrats by and large will want to pay.

Of the three groups in the Senate, the Progressives are one that knows exactly where it is going. It has a very definite program, a very definite purpose in life. Whether you approve of that program or whether you do or not, it is there, a thing to be definitely and unswervingly pursued from now on.

Neither the Democrats nor the Republican regulars have any set course ahead.

LOOKING back, the progressives were very clear as to what they wanted to do about the tariff bill. They wanted to pass one favoring agriculture and failing in that they would have unhesitatingly killed the bill.

Now the Democrats had no such determined purpose as this. They fell in, or were coaxed into the coalition at the outset and the progressives quickly whipped them into a position from which it was most difficult for them to emerge.

They finally got out, but in doing so gave one of the most disgusting political performances I have ever seen.

* * * *

AND another thing: The progressives are not likely to feel so kindly to the Democrats for eliminating Senator McMaster from their midst and very nearly eliminating Senator Schall.

Indeed, of both instances the progressives may well ask of what manner of men are the Democrats. McMaster could not have been defeated and Schall could not have been endangered had not the Democrats combined with the Hoover Republicans to get them. The only sin they had committed in the eyes of these Hoover Republicans was that they had voted with the Democrats. Whereupon the Democrats said greedily: "Come on, we will help you get them."

The case of Senator Pine in Oklahoma, was different. He bolted the coalition at a crucial time in the tariff fight.

BRAZILIAN REGIME RECOGNIZED BY U.S.

Washington First of Major Powers Formally to Acknowledge Government.

COUP FORTNIGHT AGO

(Associated Press).

First of the major world powers to recognize the new provisional government of Brazil, the United States formally acknowledged yesterday the administration of Provisional President Getulio Vargas to be the controlling political factor in that country.

Recognition by the United States of the new Brazilian regime was announced by Secretary Stimson after a conference with President Hoover and upon receiving from Ambassador Morgan at Rio de Janeiro a report upon the entire question of recognition. In addition the Brazilian administration had made a formal request for such action.

The recognition was accorded 15 days after the government of former President Washington Luis had been overthrown by a coup d'etat which ended widespread revolutionary activities. Secretary Stimson made his announcement of recognition in a formal statement.

Situation Studied by Morgan.

"The American Ambassador at Rio received a note some days ago," the statement said, "from the de facto government of Brazil, setting forth the composition of the present government, stating that it will respect national obligations contracted abroad as well as treaties and other international obligations and requesting recognition.

"Ambassador Morgan, at our request, has been studying the entire situation upon which the question of recognition depends and the department has received this morning his final report.

"Thereafter we instructed him to answer the request above mentioned that this Government will be happy to continue with the new government of Brazil the same friendly relations as with its predecessors.

Exact Status Wanted.

Unlike the immediate recognition of new regimes recently in Argentina, Peru and Bolivia, the formal announcement was delayed pending the receipt of the report from Ambassador Morgan as to the exact status of the new Brazilian administration.

State Department officials had raised the question whether the new administration was a successor to the government of President Washington Luis or an entirely new government. In the former case no re-recognition would have been necessary.

The day before the unseating of Luis, the United States had placed an embargo on arms to the rebels.

The rebel coup d'etat came as a considerable surprise to the State Department. The fact that it had just forbidden the sale of arms to those who came in power caused the American Government to approach the question of recognition cautiously and to await some move of the Brazilian regime itself.

Instructions Similar to Others.

The instructions to Ambassador Morgan to extend formal recognition to the provisional government were in the usual diplomatic terms and were similar to those usually sent to ambassadors abroad on such occasions.

It will not be necessary, State Department officials said, for Morgan to present new credentials at Rio de Janeiro or for the Brazilian envoy in Washington to present new credentials to the President, unless, as is the case with the new ambassadors, a new appointee is sent in place of Brazilian Ambassador Do Amaral.

Stimson Note Delivered.

Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Edwin V. Morgan, American Ambassador to Brazil, today called at the Brazilian foreign office and notified the new government of American recognition.

He delivered the following message from Secretary of State Stimson:

"The Government of the United States is happy to continue with the new government of Brazil the same friendly relations it has enjoyed with its predecessors."

Manganese Group To Fight Dumping

Convention of Producers Will Scan Exports From Russia.

The alleged dumping of manganese in this country by Soviet Russia will be the principal theme of the convention of the American Manganese Producers Association in the Hotel Mayflower Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mining operators from many States are coming here to seek senatorial action against what is called a violation of the antidumping law of 1921. It is reported that Senator Oddie, of Nevada, will sponsor, when Congress reconvenes, a resolution to inquire into the alleged dumping of goods here by Russia.

This campaign has succeeded the activities of the association to obtain a higher manganese tariff. It will be the main topic of all the business sessions and at the dinner in the Mayflower, the evening after the first day's meeting.

James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, who has an interest in Virginia manganese mines, will preside at the dinner. J. Carson Adkerson, of Lynchburg, Va., president of the association, has charge of the meeting.

Robert Barry Sues For Reno Divorce

Asks That Court Establish Permanent Alimony of $300 Monthly.

Special to The Washington Post.

Reno, Nev., Nov. 8.—Suit for divorce was filed here today by Robert Barry, special correspondent of the New York Evening World, against Menze Busch Barry, of Washington. Mental cruelty and incompatibility are listed as grounds in the complaint.

Barry seeks to have the court give legal effect to a separation agreement of May, 1925, carrying $300 a month for support of Mrs. Barry and a minor child. Barry asks the court to fix that amount as permanent alimony, and undertakes to pay Mrs. Barry $300 a month for the remainder of her life, irrespective of remarriage.

The complaint sets forth that a separation occurred in July, 1924, and that in May, 1925, a voluntary permanent separation was reached. At that time Mrs. Barry withdrew her suit in the District of Columbia Supreme Court for a limited divorce. She recently reinstituted that suit.

Woman 'Dry' Quits Boston For Home in 'Arid' Florida

Sees Southern State as Promised Land With Drinking "Perpetrated by Privileged People From North;" Considers New York a Warning. Considers New York as Warning.

Boston, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, prohibitionist leader, who announced she was moving to Florida as a protest against the repeal of the Massachusetts State prohibition enforcement act in Tuesday's election, has writen the Boston Globe that she will be assured of the protection of a strong State law there.

Mrs. Peabody offered her Beverly estate, Green Walls, for sale after denouncing Massachusetts as an "outlaw" State, and was believed by friends to have left Boston yesterday for Orlando, Fla.

"In spite of the wet situation in Miami," she wrote the Globe, "an experience of five winters in Central Florida assures me of the protection of a strong State law which is remarkably effective. Florida has dry officials, governor, congressmen and others. The drinking in Miami and Palm Beach is perpetrated by privileged people from the North." She described the national prohibition situation as "highly encouraging," and added:

"The women throughout the country are organized and understand the situation. They are beginning a campaign of education which will bear fruit certainly within two years. Massachusetts in the meantime will be getting her experience. Let us consider New York not as an example but as warning."

GOVERNMENT WORKERS SEEK RETIREMENT FUNDS AS LOANS

cussion of the proposed small-loan law which is scheduled for early hearing.

If the small-loan law as now proposed, providing a legal rate of 3½ per cent a month interest on loans up to $300, is adopted, it is pointed out, this would have a definite effect upon any legislation affecting disposition of the retirement fund for loan purposes.

Whether the congressional sympathizers with the proposed loan provision would agree to a change in the law is a question they are not prepared to answer.

Several unlicensed lenders in the District who have been charging interest as high as 900 per cent annually have closed their offices and left the District since publication of The Post's series which resulted in conviction of one lender for operating without a license.

Others Are Cautious.

Those who continue in business are etremely cautious in making loans, investigation discloses. They will not even permit a prospective borrower to sign a loan application until his name and address has been taken and investigated to make certain that he is not an employe of The Post or a friend of such an employe, or that he is not in any pway connected with any of the judiciary offices of the District or Federal Government.

Legitimate money lenders operating just across the District line, under the small-loan laws of Maryland and Virginia, which permit the 3½ per cent interest charge with a maximum of $300, report on the other hand that their business has grown perceptibly since The Post pointed out the manner in which borrowers have been robbed by illegitimate lenders.

Operating with printed tables showing the amount each borrower must pay for any amount up to $300, these lenders are conducting thriving businesses in Bethesda, Silver Spring, Rosslyn and other points close to the District line, acquiring all of the loan business which is being lost to honest lenders in the District, who are not able to operate profitably within the law and who will not join forces with the loan sharks who live with the constant fear that the next customer may be a policeman with a warrant.

1,000 LEGIONNAIRES WILL STAGE PARADE

Philadelphians to Be Met on Reaching Alexandria by Special Committee.

CRASH INJURES SAILORS

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The party of 1,000 Shriners and members of the American Legion and their families, forming the Armistice Day caravan from Philadelphia, will arrive in Alexandria at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon and will be met by a committee of 25 members of Alexandria Post, No. 24, American Legion, headed by Commander Sidney Weil, who will escort the visitors to historic Gadsby's Tavern, the legion headquarters. The party will then be shown the Masonic Temple, on Cameron street, where the relics of George Washington are kept, and which houses the Alexandria-Washington Lodge, of which Washington was the first master. Another point to be visited will be the old Presbyterian Meeting House, on South Fairfax street.

The visitors will then stage a parade on King street, to the George Washington Masonic National Memorial Temple, on Shooters Hill, where they will be welcomed by Mayor Carroll Pierce on behalf of the City of Alexandria. Charles H. Callahan, past grand master of Masons in Virginia, member of the national board of trustees of the temple and the moving spirit in its conception and construction, will explain the temple to the visitors.

The party, which will make the trip from Philadelphia in buses, was preceded by trucks carrying all commissary supplies and cooking equipment, and they have leased the Naval Torpedo Station here for the day, where dinner will be served in the afternoon, after the inspection of the Masonic Temple. The visitors will leave Alexandria at 6:30 o'clock for the return trip to Philadelphia.

A conference of the Virginia Fire Department Auxiliaries was held in the Trinity Methodist Church here Friday, presided over by Mrs. John W. Travers, State and local president, and attended by representatives from Luray, Staunton, Harrisonburg, Orange, Newport News, Fredericksburg, Jefferson District and Alexandria.

Mayor Carroll Pierce welcomed the visitors on behalf of the city, and short talks were given by Fire Chief James M. Duncan, jr., Dan S. Hollenga, business manager of the chamber of commerce; Dr. Herbert E. Cross, representing the Rotary Club; Robert G. Carter, president of the Kiwanis Club; J. T. McHugh, president of the Potomac Fire Department, and John W. Travers, who was introduced by his wife as one of the oldest active firemen in Alexandria.

Before adjourning, the meeting accepted an invitation to meet in Harrisonburg the second Friday in May.

Warren Harley, 22 years old, of Lorton, was treated at the Alexandria Hospital yesterday for severe scalds and burns from water and steam from the radiator of his automobile, which overturned on the old road between Pohick and Lorton. A companion, Walter Hicks, of Accotink, escaped injury and succeeded in rescuing Mr. Harley from under the overturned machine. He hailed a passing motorist, who brought the injured man to the hospital.

Officials at the Potomac Freight Yards announced yesterday that within the last two weeks 72 employes, principally laborers, had been furloughed, and that the lay-off of men is now complete. It had been rumored that a large number were to be laid off yesterday but, according to Superintendent Robert M. Colvin, this was an error. The lay-off of the men is attributed to the general business depression, and is said to be only temporary.

Since July 1, it is understood that approximately 175 men have been furloughed from the freight yards, including laborers and brakemen.

Arthur G. Devine, whose home is at 19 Pennington street, Newark, N. J., and Morris Lieberman, of 86 Sutton avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., both sailors stationed at the Naval Air Station, Hampton Roads, were injured yesterday morning when their automobile overturned when making the turn at North Washington street extended. Mr. Devine was the more seriously injured, suffering two fractures of the right leg. Mr. Lieberman escaped with cuts and bruises.

Both men were taken to the Alexandria Hospital by G. N. Morgan, of Lexington, Va., who happened to be passing at the time, and later the men were taken to the Naval Hospital in Washington. Their car was badly damaged, and before police arrived on the scene two wheels had been stolen.

Grace Reynolds, 16 years old, of New York City, who has been held in the detention room at police headquarters since her companion, Edwin W. Schmitt, 19 years old, of Aqueduct, Long Island, was shot while in the alleged act of robbing a gas pump at the filling station of Minor Shelton, at Woodbridge, Prince William County, early Friday morning, was sent to her home yesterday, her parents having sent the money for her fare to Police Capt. W. W. Campbell.

Schmitt is still in the Alexandria Hospital, and when able to get out will be served with a warrant charging him with stealing gasoline.

Armistice Day will be observed by Alexandria Post, No. 24, American Legion, with a program at Gadsby's Tavern on Tuesday evening, to be broadcast between 8 and 8:30 o'clock. Col. Clarence Deems, U. S. A., will give a short talk, and Charles Colfax Long, of Washington, will speak on "The Unknown Soldier," and a New York orchestra will give special selections. Commander Sidney Weil will be in charge and has requested all who expect to attend to be in the hall by 7:45 in order that the speakers may not be disturbed.

The Jewish Community Center has been organized with Louis Sidenberg as president. The other officers are Miss Anne Levinson, vice president; Dave Rosenberg, recording secretary; Dave Schrott, treasurer; Miss Ethel Berkow, financial secretary, and Ben Minovitz, sergeant at arms. Samuel Goldstein is chairman of the committee on constitution and by-laws.

The organization has at present a membership of 75, but the charter will be held open until a meeting to be held on Thursday night next, at 808 Wolfe street, for additional names.

The Rev. Benjamin R. Lacy, president of the Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, will preach to the congregation of the Second Presbyterian Church today, the services to be held in the old First Presbyterian Church Building, as the Second Church is undergoing extensive repairs.

Alexandria Lodge, No. 758, B. P. O. Elks, will hold the annual memorial service of that order on Sunday, December 7, in the auditorium of the Elks' Home, and tentative plans provide for an afternoon service. The committee on arrangements is composed of former Representative Charles C. Carlin, Judge Howard Worth Smith, representative-elect; Judge William P. Woolls, Dr. Robert South Barrett, Michael T. Dwyer, John W. Tulloch, J. Owen Lynch, Harry Kinken, Herman Friedlander and P. A. Kersey.

The annual memorial services of Alexandria and Belle Haven Councils, Order Fraternal Americans, will be held today at the First Baptist Church, when a special sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Pierce S. Ellis. The members will assemble at 7:30 p. m. at Odd Fellows' Hall, to march to the church.

The Business and Professional Women's Club will hold a meeting on Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, at the George Mason Hotel, when plans will be made for a Christmas celebration under the club auspices.

ELECTION RESULTS ARE UNDER SURVEY

replaces the Republican governor of Minnesota.

The Democrats in turn lost the governorship of South Dakota by electing the only Democrat who had been able to carry the State in 26 years, to the Senate. So it can be hardly classed as a loss.

Several days must elapse before the full story can be told on the State legislature fights. About all that is known at this time is that the Democrats captured the Indiana house with 65 members to the Republicans' 35. The Republicans will retain the senate 27 to 23.

In Ohio the outcome will be close, it appearing now that the two parties will split about half and half in both houses.

The Republicans retained their majority in both Colorado bodies, in the house by 65 to 32 and by a small majority in the senate.

G. O. P. Holds New York Houses.

Similarly, the Republicans have apparently held on to both bodies of the New York State Legislature, though by only 1 vote in the Senate and a similarly scarcely perceptible margin in the lower chamber.

In Maryland the Democrats will have both the House and Senate, the latter, however, being almost evenly divided.

On the subject of prohibition, the wets seem to have made about 35 distinct gains in Congress, bringing the outright or militant wet strength there to 135. This is, of course, short of a majority and seemingly hopelessly short of the three-fourths majority necessary for the passage of any resolution changing the eighteenth amendment.

But these 135 members do not include the modificationists or the lukewarm dryes who will be visibly affected by what happened Tuesday. Yet even with these potential flops a majority for the wets, 218, does not yet seem to be in sight.

Wet Gain in Senate.

The wets' numerical strength in the Senate, 16, remains about the same. They gain in that body, however, in that they have replaced certain quiet wets with militant ones. Marcus Coolidge, from Massachusetts, for example, should be considered a gain in that respect, but it can hardly be said that in displacing Senator Gillette he displaces a dry.

The same might be said of J. Ham Lewis' displacing of Senator Deneen.

Generally speaking, however, it may be said that in virtually every instance in which the wet and dry question was a major issue in Tuesday's election, the wets won with the exception of Delaware. In Montana where the conscientiously dry Senator Walsh was reelected, the wet and dry issue hardly figured in the campaign at all.

Power Issue Is Seen.

Now another thing, the great power issue: I had not thought it had enough fire in it to constitute a major political issue, or at least that it was constituting one. It is apparent from Tuesday's results that it did come in for its share of atetntion by the electorate.

And in every fight in which it figured to any appreciable extent at all, the matter was decided against the corporations. Notable instances that come readily to mind are the election of a Democratic governor in Connecticut, Pinchot's election in Pennsylvania, the election of the independent O. B. Lovette in the First Tennessee District, the reelection of Norris in Nebraska, the victory of Costigan in Colorado and so on, and not forgetting Roosevelt's crushing of Tuttle in New York.

As to what it all means, more important probably attaches to what the Democrats think it means. As a party in the House and Senate they will try to forget about prohibition, that is certain. In 1932 it will be different.

Democratic Economic Policy.

The national leaders of the party have said what they take the result to mean in matters economic. They look to it as approval of their course in the tariff fight. Yet they do not construe it as a mandate, they say, to come running in and turn the tariff upside down.

As business men themselves, they say, in spite of the impression which the Republicans try to give of them, they fully appreciate the economic folly of attempting a general revision, or of pursuing any course that will cause uncertainty in business.

What they do have in mind, obviously, is an effort to touch up the tariff here and there, revise it in spots, by the passage of individual bills, measures dealing with but one commodity at a time. They call it a "popgun" revision.

It is difficult to see where there is any alarming note for business in that procedure.

Tariff Commission Busy.

The President has made it well known that he did not approve of many of the rates of the Hawley-Smoot act, so have the Republican leaders. Indeed, the Tariff Commission, under the flexible power, has set about to correct the inequalities. Some recommendations are expected to be ready by the time Congress convenes next month.

The Democrats say that the correction of inequalities here and there is all they intend to do. Undoubtedly, they will differ with the administration on many of these so-called corrections. But in every case where there is a difference of opinion the President has only to veto the bill making the particular change.

In the House the Democrats will not have enough strength to override his veto unless the Republicans' own regular ranks, irrespective of the insurgents, should go all to pieces, which is not expected.

And, of course, none of this can come about until December 1931.

The only gloom seemingly possible in the picture is that for the Republicans, and it is solely political.

Speculation as to 1932.

It is inevitable that there should be speculation in the light of what happened Tuesday to the possibilities of 1932.

It would seem to be fairly conclusive that Governor Roosevelt will be a most formidable contender for the Democratic presidential nomination and that considerable of a fight will have to be made to keep the bunting away from him.

He, Gov. Ritchie over in Maryland and Robert J. Bulkley, of Ohio, emerged as the Democratic heroes. To advance Bulkley to the presidential limelight so early, however, would seem to be most fanciful. Maybe he can get the vice presidential nomination. His Senate seat will be vacant again in 1932, however, as he is only now elected to serve former Senator Willis' unexpired term.

The consensus is that regardless of who the Democratic nominee will be that he will have to run on a wet platform.

Hoover May Modify Stand.

There is the expectation in many quarters, too, that Mr. Hoover will have modified his position to conform with the recommendations of his Law Enforcement Commission.

In that event, watch out for the opportunist, Gifford Pinchot, running as a dry-Progressive and seeking, among other things, to cut into the South.

For many months those observers who have sought to compare the Republicans' predicament in 1932 with that in 1912 have lacked one important complement—the man to split the party as Roosevelt did.

COUNTY VOTE CHECK OFFICIALLY ENDED

Totals in Prince Georges Fail to Alter Earlier Results Much.

COMPARISONS ARE MADE

Official returns of the Prince Georges County elections made public yesterday show that while the majorities were changed in some instances, there was not sufficient difference between official and the unofficial counts to alter the outcome first reported.

Republicans lost control of the board of county commissioners by only 229 votes, the official report shows, this being the difference between the vote of Ormond W. Phair, Democrat, who was elected, and Charles A. Ryon, next on the list. And the G. O. P. only missed having an equal number of representatives in the House of Delegates by 106 votes. William F. Keys, who was elected on the Democratic ticket, was the lowest on the list of those selected, with 6,719, while Richard C. Zantzinger, next to him, had 6,614.

The official report raises Alan Bowie's majority from about 140, on the unofficial returns, to 185. Alan Bowie was the Democratic contestant for the office of county prosecutor, and it seemed until late Wednesday afternoon that he would be beaten by Albert R. Hassall, Republican, who had run ahead from the time returns began to come in. In the race for treasurer of the county, Brice Bowie's victory was won on a majority of 1,245.

Influence of Independents.

To what extent the independents influenced the election is difficult to determine. They will point out that the Republican candidate for sheriff, whom they indorsed, won by a majority of 962. On the other hand, of the six whom they indorsed for the State Legislature, only two were elected.

One of these two was a highly popular Democrat, whose chances of election were conceded by all to be unusually good. Furthermore, of the four whom they indorsed and who were defeated, three were the lowest on the list when the votes were counted. They indorsed two Democrats for the board of county commissioners, both of whom were elected, and two of the Republicans they backed won out.

The independents supported thirteen candidates, three of whom, Stephen W. Gambrill, Charles C. Marbury and Curtice W. Hopkins, were almost certain of election. Out of the remaining ten, five were elected.

The independents were supposed to be strongest in Spaldings District, with the greater portion of their strength in the metropolitan area. Yet one precinct of Spaldings went for James W. Rogers for sheriff, when his Republican opponent, Hopkins, had been indorsed by the coalition.

Desertion Report Unfounded.

Reports that a Democratic leader in Spaldings had gone out of the fold would seem to be disproved by the fact that the district, in both precincts, returned majorities for 26 Democrats, and for only 7 Republicans.

The Law Enforcement League of the county, with headquarters in Laurel, has indorsed Hopkins for sheriff, and yet lost both precincts of its district to Rogers. The continued existence of the Independents is doubtful. In this election they consisted of a coalition of the Law Enforcement League, the Prince Georges Municipal Officers Association and the Taxpayers Association.

Municipal officers have been warned that their activity transgresses civil service rules, which will be an incentive for them to steer clear of politics for the sake of their members who are Government employes. In addition, at least two of their most active members have decided that political industry is outside the proper sphere of action of the association.

SURVEY RAPS RED TAPE IN CAPITAL

points out in this regard, is a natural tourist center and convention city in proportion to the business it attracts. Hotel facilities are sufficient and of the highest type, but there is virtually no effort on a large scale to induce convention and tourists to visit the National Capital, nor to give them adequate service when they arrive, the survey complains.

In exchange for another "pat on the back" comes this censure: "While the government of the District of Columbia is honest, a number of commissions and bureaus and persons who have authority over the District result in a more or less hodge-podge government so that needed projects and improvements are delayed anywhere from two to ten years with citizens and bubsiness men powerless to go ahead with these projects as in other communities."

Turning again to a more praiseworthy attitude, the survey observes that absence from debt of the District of Columbia distinguishes it from most other municipalities, a situation that assures its citizens of a definite knowledge of their responsibility in development of the city.

The purchasing power of the National Capital and its residents is without equal in the United States, the survey contends. This, it is said, has been assured by steady Government income and placing the community growth on a "sound and steady basis rather than any boom or mushroom fashion." The city is among the first four cities in the country in the high average per capita salary of the employes, the survey observes.

Growth of bank deposits has been consistent and steady along with postal receipts, number of telephones, number of automobiles and other modern conveniences, the survey shows.

County Bonding Issues.

Criticism is given with the assertion that the metropolitan area outside of the city is creating considerable bonded indebtedness upon itself "as distinguished from the District of Columbia proper. The survey grants that this surrounding territory, consisting of Montgomery County, Prince Georges County, Arlington County and the City of Alexandria has developed. The sewerage and water supply in the nearby territory is termed "very inadequate."

High praise is given Washington as an educational, cultural and scientific center. The survey in reference to schools shows the vast store of educational matter at the disposal of those who come to the National Capital together with the large number of colleges, specializing schools and libraries and museums.

Some criticism is also given to the schools. The survey points out that there are approximately 7,500 unoccupied desks in the public school system and too many schools with play areas that are too small. There is a lack of specialized schools for undeveloped children and the existing trade schools could be very much improved, the survey states.

Lack of Music Center.

The survey complains of the lack of an opera house and music center. Such a center is essential to give Washington completeness as a cultural center, the survey maintains.

Unparalleled facilities conducive to the "joy of living" are found in the National Capital, the survey points out. The city is an ideal location for national headquarters of trade organizations, insurance companies and concerns of a similar nature, the survey further observes.

Zoning more efficient than in other cities assures stability of real estate values, the survey states. Transportation facilities both within and to and from the city are excellent, it is shown. Hotel facilities are fourth in the country, it is pointed out. Other "boosts" in the survey are to the effect that Washington has an unusually fine water supply, progressive labor laws, excellent public utilities and home municipal administration.

But for every compliment there is a "knock." Home ownership, the survey contends, is not large enough. Washington is said to be one of the lowest cities in the country in this regard in the Board of Trade "birds'-eye" view of the city.

Bus Terminal Needed.

Lack of a bus terminal is given particular attention and airport facilities are "most insufficient" the survey contends. The survey expresses confidence, however, that great progress in airport facilities will be made in the near future. Attention is drawn to the fact that a bill providing for establishment of an airport on the Virginia shore of the Potomac, not more than ten minutes from the center of the city, is now before a committee of the House of Representatives, having passed the Senate.

Coordination and better development of public recreational facilities are urged. The general public should be brought to realize the advantages of such facilities as a community center department and parks, the survey avers.

Commercial development is overdone for present requirements with too many stores in outlying sections of the city, the survey contends. Residential construction including apartments is considered to be on a normal basis and there is an ample supply of office buildings and office space, it is observed. The survey also observes that the rooming house business has declined considerably.

Garage space is inadequate, the survey states. In view of the general cleanliness and facilities of the city, the death rate is too high, the survey points out.

Attractive Survey Features.

Attractions of the survey are a large map of Washington and vicinity and various charts showing the population increase, zoning of the Washington region, government plan of the District of Columbia, bonded indebtedness of neighboring communities, increase in real estate assessments, schools, pupils and teachers, colleges and universities, parks and playgrounds, libraries, data on churches and charities, cost of living in several cities, charts on commerce and industry, a unique map showing the size of the Washington market and charts showing the income groups of families, wholesale and retail outlets, incoming passengers, freight car loadings daily and real estate conditions.

The make-up of the survey is particularly attractive. It is divided into sections and the reader can refer to any phase of the cities' life at a glance. An index at the back of the book is an aid in this regard.

The first section is devoted to the territory of the District of Columbia and its environs. This is followed by a historical sketch. Organizations devoted to the physical development of the city are then discussed. This is followed by a complete outline of the city government and its various departments. The bonded indebtedness of the surrounding territory is discussed in the next section. A sketch of taxes of the city and environs follow.

Public services are next discussed and then education. Following this is a section on recreation. Then religious agencies and social agencies and institutions. The cost of living is discussed in the next section; then industrial and commercial resources, followed by sections of natural resources and markets. Transportation is the subject of the next department followed by real estate and building and business.

CONVICT SHOT DEAD IN BREAK; ONE FLEES

Two Others Recaptured Soon After Bolt for Liberty in Oklahoma.

SHERIFF IS EXONERATED

Chandler, Okla., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—One of four fleeing prisoners was killed today by Ted Mears, Lincoln County sheriff, two others were captured soon afterward and returned to the county jail and the fourth with a commandeered automobile and driver still was sought late today.

Mears immediately was exonerated by a coroner's jury of responsibility for the death of James Hapgood, 28, who fired at the sheriff when overtaken and in turn was shot and killed.

Hapgood, who was acquitted nine years ago of killing an Oklahoma City taxicab driver he accused of insulting his 17-year-old wife, had told officers that he was under a 99-year sentence in California for a series of holdups. He was held here for a filling station robbery.

Fred Moore, an alleged bank robber, routed Jack Hileman, a pipeline welder, out of bed this morning after escaping from jail and forced Hileman, clad in his night clothes, to drive him away in Hileman's car.

Homer Chevraux, charged with robbery of three banks, and Bill McDaniels, convicted with Moore of a store burglary, were recaptured soon after their escape.

One of the men slugged the jailer over the head with a board when he brought in their breakfast. A Negro janitor fired at them with a shotgun and the sheriff immediately took up the pursuit.

Italy Decorates Georgetown Men

Dean of Medicine and Regent of Law Made Officers of Crown.

Italy has decorated Dr. John A. Foote, dean of the Georgetown School of Medicine, and the Rev. Thomas B. Chetwood, S. J., regent of the Georgetown School of Law, both having been made officers of the Crown of Italy, one of the oldest orders of the kingdom.

The Italian Ambassador, who recently conferred rank in the same order upon President W. Coleman Nevils, S. J., of Georgetown, and Dr. James Brown Scott, of the school of foreign service, presented the two officials with the insignias of the decoration. In doing so he acted for King Victor Emanuel.

Dr. Foote has made important studies and translations of early Italian medical history, and Father Chetwood won recognition through work in behalf of international peace. The Georgetown medical dean has been on the faculty for nearly 30 years and is one of the leading pediatrists in the country. Father Chetwood, a more recent addition to the Georgetown faculty, is the first regent the law school has had.

NAVAL RADIO MAN RESCUES WOMAN AFTER BRIDGE LEAP

Bush was crossing the bridge in an automobile driven by Mrs. Anna Breugger, 1716 Sixteenth street southeast, when he saw a coat and hat on the bridge rail and was informed by bystanders of the suicide attempt. Shedding his pea jacket, he ran to the southern end of the bridge and dived from the sea wall.

Miss Wyckoff-Ormsbee was being swept toward the Potomac and a first attempt to drag her to the piling under the bridge failed as she struggled and fought off her rescuer. Bush, exhausted by the cold water and his efforts at rescue, swam to the bridge structure where he clung while mustering his strength for another attempt.

"Go on and get her," shouted some of those in the crowd above and a line was passed down to him.

With the rope secure about his waist, the weary radio man again pushed off, reaching the drowning woman's side as she was disappearing beneath the river's surface. Clutching her hair in his left hand, Bush signaled to men on the bridge to drag him back.

As victim and rescuer reached the bridge the red cabin of the police boat showed, a mere dot on the ribbon of water. Members of the harbor patrol had been warned by an order from headquarters to keep a sharp lookout for a woman missing from her home on Longfellow street northwest.

A suicide note had been left by the victim of a nervous breakdown and her anxious husband feared she might end her life in the river. Through marine glasses the police crew saw the throng on the bridge and the human forms in the water where Bush held Miss Wyckoff-Ormsbee to the bridge underpinning.

Drawing alongside, the police lifted aboard Miss Wyckoff-Ormsbee, unconscious, and the Navy man, whose limbs were paralyzed from the long immersion, taking them to the nearby navy yard dock. The woman was sent in a yard ambulance to Casualty Hospital. Her rescuer was given first aid at the Navy Yard Dispensary, later going to his home, 1716 Sixteenth street southeast.

Drs. Joseph D. Rogers and Louis Jimal, who treated Miss Wyckoff-Ormsbee, last night said that she was suffering from shock and immersion, but probably will recover.

She had been a patient at Garfield Hospital until Friday morning when she was discharged. Physicians there had been treating her for a hip injury suffered at Geneva, Switzerland, where she had been studying. She returned to this country about October 20 and had been under treatment for about two weeks.

Miss Wyckoff-Ormsbee spent Friday night at the home of friends, Mrs. Anna W. Eckels and Mrs. Douglas McKenzie, 701 Shepherd street northwest, secretaries employed at the offices of the National Council for the Prevention of Wars, 532 Seventeenth street northwest. When they left for office yesterday morning she did not accompany them, but remained at home.

Bankhead Wants G. O. P. To Run Both Houses

New Orleans, La., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Senator-elect John H. Bankhead, who defeated Senator J. Thomas Heflin in the Alabama election, said in a statement here today that he would oppose organization of either the Senate or House by the Democrats even if the official result of the national elections should give the Democrats a majority.

"I do not want the Democrats to have anything to do with the Hoover administration," he said. "Let the Republicans organize and run things as they want until they get out of office and then the Democrats will take the situation over.

"I do no want the Republicans to be placed in a position where they can alibi their shortcomings on any member of the Democratic party."

CONFESSION SEEN IN TORCH SLAYING

sey City was her husband, who, she alleged, plotted her death here.

Mrs. Lena Swavely said that she had not seen her husband since she departed from him in 1929, and she was unaware, she said, that he had married again She said that she had not obtained a divorce

After pleading nolo contendre here to the charge of conspiring to kill his wife, Swavely was sentenced on June 2, 1920, to eighteen months in the county jail He was paroled August 9, 1921.

The woman told Capt. Emanuel that her husband had hired a man to pose as a plumber to again admittance to the Swavely home here, and offered him $200 to slay her with a hammer. The man gained admittance to the house, she declared, but lost his nerve and exposed the plot.

Mrs. Swavely said that she was Swavely's third wife.

LUCKY READERS WIN FREE MOVIE TICKETS

First Batch of 104 Will Be Mailed Out to Them Tomorrow.

CASH AWARD IS MAGNET

Readers of The Washington Post know their motion pictures—"and how," says Nelson Bell, as he views the daily batch of mail that comes to him as judge of The Post "Movie Knowledge" contest. From the hundreds of replies to the first questionnaire, that appeared last Sunday, he found 104 that were correct.

The list of those who sent in correct answers appears below and the persons named will each receive one ticket to one of the seven downtown theaters participating in the test, and also have strengthened their position in the race for the first cash prize of $25.

Tickets will be mailed to winners beginning tomorrow, and to winners of subsequent questionnaires as the six-day period allowed for return of answers to each questionnaire expires. There are an equal number of tickets admitting to each of the seven theaters, but The Post can not attempt to apportion these in accordance with the preference of winners. They will be selected and mailed indiscriminately.

35 CHURCHES HERE TO HAVE MISSIONS

Prominent Preachers Start Eight-Day Campaigns Next Sunday.

"MORE FAITH IS NEEDED"

Thirty-five of the best-known missioners of the Episcopal Church in this country will participate in an eight-day preaching mission to be opened at 4 o'clock next Sunday afternoon at Constitution Hall with a public service to be addressed by several of the foremost figures.

Principal speakers will include Bishop James E. Freeman, as presiding officer, whose suggestion led to a call for this preaching mission; the Right Rev. R. E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of West Virginia, and Dr. William C. Sturgis, of the Library of Congress. Massed choirs of various Episcopal churches here will render an elaborate musical program.

Arranged for missions to be held in 35 Episcopal churches in and near Washington by the various clergymen during the eight days, beginning next Sunday night, the mission has been designed in the belief that "a more vital and intelligent Christian faith is the main need of our day, and that from it should come a richer personal life and a greater spirit of helpfulness to our fellow man." The committee in charge, headed by Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington Cathedral, added that "if this can be accomplished, such pressing local problems as those of unemployment and relief will be easily met this winter, and the foundations laid for the more effective permanent work of the church."

Bishop Strider will conduct the mission at Epiphany Church. Missioners at other churches here include the Rev. John Rathbone Oliver, of Baltimore, at St. Thomas; the Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, of Greenwich, Conn., at St. Alban's; Bishop Clinton S. Quinn, of Texas, at All Souls; the Rev. Spence Burton, of Cambridge, Mass., at St. Luke's; the Rev. Edgar C. SMITH GROUP TRIAL TO BE NOVEMBER 24

PITTS ARRAIGNMENT SET

Justice William Hitz in District Supreme Court yesterday continued until November 24 the trial of four former officials of the F. H. Smith Co. on charges of conspiracy to embezzle funds and destroy records of the corporation. The trial originally was set for November 17.

At the same time Justice Hitz granted to defense attorneys, Wilton J. Lambert, Frank G. Raichle and R. H. Yeatman, their motion requiring the Government to furnish a more specific bill of particlars.

Pitts' Arraignment Due.

It also was decided that G. Bryan Pitts, former chairman of the board of the company; C. Elbert Anadale and John H. Edwards, jr., former vice presidents, would be arraigned before Justice Hitz tomorrow. Samuel J. Henry, former president, pleaded not guilty Friday and through Attorney Harry S. Barger demanded a separate trial. It was understood yesterday that the other defendants also will seek a severance.

Action of Justice Hitz, in granting continuance came after he had ruled on the motion of defense counsel for Pitts, Anadale and Edwards for a more complete statement of facts charged in the indictment. Special Assistant to the Attorney General Nugent Dodds and Assistant United States Attorney Neil Burkinshaw, said that this could be delivered by Tuesday of this week. At that point defense counsel stated that if they could not get the details they sought until Tuesday they would not be able to build up their defense in time to go on trial the following Monday, as scheduled. Justice Hitz then carried the case over for a week.

Trial Long Hanging Fire.

Trial of the four former officials of the Smith company has been hanging fire for almost a year, largely due to pleadings. All such obstacles, however, have now been removed and the trial, unless the unforeseen occurs, will begin on November 24.

The Government, it was stated, was ready to proceed with the trial on November 17. More than 60 witnesses have ben subpenaed by the Government, it was stated.

Justice Hitz is expected to decide tomorrow whether he will permit Henry to go on trial separately. He took Attorney Barger's motion for severance under advisement.

Two Men Are Convicted On Gaming-Table Charge

Alphonso Perruso and Charles J Bovello, who are alleged to have operated a gaming establishment at 803 North Capitol street, within a block of the Government Printing Office, were convicted by a District Supreme Court jury before Justice Oscar R. Luhring yesterday on charges of setting up a gaming table. Sentence was reserved.

Four counts of the indictment on which the men were convicted charged them with setting up a table for blackjack. The jury, however, acquitted them on four counts of the indictment which charged operation of a handbook on horse races.

BALLOU DESCRIBES INSTRUCTION AIDS

Latest Installment of His Report Discusses New Developments.

CLASS SIZE HELD FACTOR

Methods of improving instruction in the public schools of the District are discussed by Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou in the latest installment of his annual report, covering school growth in the past ten years.

They are: Better understanding of children; discovery and correction of physical defects of children; better organization of pupils into classes; better courses of study; better use of teachers' time; better trained teachers entering the service; training of teachers after they enter the service and effective supervision.

Educational research as a means of learning more about school children is coming more and more to be recognized as equally important in the junior and senior high schools as in the elementary, Dr. Ballou declares. Homogeneous grouping of children is the rule and not the exception today in school organization in the elementary schools of Washington, he says.

Summer Round-up Urged.

In remedying defects of children, Dr. Ballou urges furtherance of the movement known as the summer round-up. The purpose of this is correction of remedial defects of children before they enter school.

The size of a class is an important factor in controlling the quality of instruction, Dr. Ballou observes. Oversized classes, he points out, mean mass instruction. He expresses gratification that in Washington classes have been kept at a size that can reasonably be instructed by an individual teacher.

The center of the educational problem is in the child rather than the course of study, the superintendent points out in discussing better courses of study. This fact is spreading throughout the school system, he says.

Hours for Kindergarten.

Adoption of the five-hour teaching day for kindergarten first and second grade teachers has done more for educational progress than any other administrative act in years, Dr. Ballou declares. The superintendent cites advantages reaped from lengthening the school day in high schools.

Efficiency of the school system will never rise above efficiency of the classroom teaching, Dr. Ballou contends, adding that the most important factor in classroom teaching is the teacher. No factor affecting instruction in the schools of Washington has received more intensive or extensive consideration than the improvement of teachers entering the service, the superintendent states. He then points out how the eligibility requirements for teachers in the public schools here have been increased, stressing the fact that the course in the teachers colleges has been raised from three to four years.

Reorganization Is Vital.

Reorganization of these institutions, which were formerly colleges, is referred to by Dr. Ballou as the most vital factor in providing for better trained teachers. The superintendent expresses belief that the teachers' colleges will have as great an influence in the improvement of instructors as in bringing better qualified teachers into the service.

A more unified program in supervision, with emphasis on scientific methods and democratic procedure has resulted from ten years' effort in organizing the supervision of the local public school system, the superintendent reports. He points out the effectiveness of a decentralized plan of supervision together with the essentiality of centralization of administration of the school system as the desirable combination and the one giving excellent results in the National Capital.

Important steps along these lines were the establishment of the administrative principalship and the system of assistant superintendents, Dr. Ballou points out.

One Dies, 4 Hurt As Autos Collide

Young Man From Frederick Killed; Injured Salesman Is Arrested.

Special to The Washington Post.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 8.—One person was killed and four injured when automobiles in which they were riding crashed together at a sharp curve on South Mountain, 15 miles west of Frederick, last night. The dead man is Franklin J. Shipley, 23 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shipley, of this city, and the injured are Frank Griffin, Joseph Marrone and Harry Chew, of this city, and Irving Wendall, of Camden, N. J.

Wendall, after having had his injuries dressed at the City Hospital, was arrested and is being held in jail on a charge of manslaughter. Shipley, driving his car, accompanied by Griffin, Chew and Marrone, was on the way to Hagerstown to call on girl friends. Wendall, a jewelry salesman was coming down the mountain in the opposite direction. Nearing the curve, it is said, Wendall lost control of his car, which ran down the incline on the left side of the road and collided with the other, the impact causing both machines to turn over.

Shipley was hurled to the road and his skull crushed. He died in about five minutes. Wendall, badly lacerated and bruised about the face, was taken to the hospital in a passing truck. Griffin, Chew and Marrone escaped with slight lacerations and bruises. Both cars were wrecked.

Chicken Stealing Plot Laid to 11

Eight Accused as Thieves and Three as Fences Who Marketed Fowls.

Special to The Washington Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 8.—Charged with having acted as "fences" for a gang which has stolen thousands of chickens in the Cumberland Valley during the past six months, and with having shipped the stolen fowls to Philadelphia commission merchants, Charles K. Stum, prominent business man of Plainfield, and his two sons, James and Harold, are under arrest.

The investigation was conducted by Pennsylvania State police, who also have taken into custody the eight alleged members of the gang. Six are said to have confessed. According to admissions, the men, police say, never robbed hen houses which had less than 50 chickens and always operated in automobiles.

They brought the loot to a barn where the chickens were transferred to the trucks of Stum, police allege.

NEW BILLS AT CAPITAL THEATERS

EARLE

"LOVE IN THE ROUGH." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the play "Spring Fever," by Vincent Lawrence, featuring Robert Montgomery and Dorothy Jordan, supported by Benny Rubin and J. C. Nugent. Directed by Charles F. Reisner. Reviewed Saturday afternoon.

By NELSON B. BELL.

Refusing to masquerade as a "presentation," a "unit" or an "idea," the vaudeville at the Earle this week—and it is by far the more diverting half of the program—has the customers winging from the moment it starts to considerably past the moment when it ends. It can not be said that it knocks the patrons right out of their chairs, because when I arrived at the theater yesterday at a trifle after 1 o'clock every chair was occupied and eager standees were packed all over the place. It will probably be like that all week.

The riot is put under way by Carlton Emmy and his Mad Wags, easily one of the most original and most thoroughly entertaining of all the dog acts that have found their way to the stage. These little fellows—there must be a dozen or fifteen of them—are all diminutive terriers with diamond collars and sagacity no end. Mr. Emmy is by way of being a bit of a comedian. The combination is irresistible.

Next come the three Brox Sisters, vocal harmonists of the first order, who initiate their delightful cycle of songs with "Singin' in the Rain," their hit from M-G-M's "Hollywood Revue." This is followed by "It Seems to Be Spring," "Swinging in a Hammock" and "Sing, You Sinners," all executed in flawless fashion with a delicacy and charm that are effectively augmented by the act's costuming and lighting.

Preceding the topline attraction are Willie, West and McGinty, those "three funny artisans," who probably would build a house on the stage if they were not such colossal and convulsing bunglers. This fifteen minutes of bizarre fun is by far the best-timed and most accurately spaced symposium of mishaps ever conceived and successfully performed in any man's theater. It is worked out to split seconds and fractional inches—every one a laugh.

Tom Patricola, assisted by the Pearl Twins, clowns, dances and mandolins his way into no less a personal triumph than he always scored with virtually the same material in George White's "Scandals." The Pearl Twins are pert and provocative foils who perform unison specialties with vigor, if not too much precision, and at times give the impression of being a little too much girl for a trifle too little costume—like the Sisters G—if you are still with us. A ribald and rollicking romp, nevertheless, any way you take it.

"Love in the Rough" is an agreeable and inconsequential bit of tomfoolery that can not quite make up its mind whether to be a straight farce of the shipping room and golf links or a musical revue. It decides finally to be a little bit of both and so isn't a great deal of either. But the crowd ate it up, so that's that.

Robert Montgomery, perhaps a shade better than his part, and Dorothy Jordan, possibly not quite so good as hers, are married into difficulties that are composed upon the Oakmont course, where one Kelly wins the championship by a single stroke and thus disarms dad who is off his game and needs a pro in the family.

Some asperity is lent the proceedings by Benny Rubin, who embellishes the action with much ludicrous by-play, some of which is comparatively new, and by J. C. Nugent—the elder of the family, you will remember—who rather tops Edward Davis as one of the irate oldsters.

This is the picture—and it is almost enough to rate it way up there—that supplies one of the most popular of the current song hits, "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," which deserves to be better sung than Mr. Montgomery and Miss Jordan are able to do it.

The Fox Movietone News and Armistice Day overture are the auxiliaries.

RIALTO

"THE CAT CREEPS." A Universal presentation of the play, "The Cat and the Canary," by John Willard, adapted for the screen by Gladys Lehman; featuring Helen Twelvetrees, supported by Raymond Hackett, Neil Hamilton and Lilyan Tashman. Directed by Rupert Julian. Reviewed Saturday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Here is one of the most delightfully shivery mystery pictures that has yet come down the pike, and all the more interesting because there is presented the original stage success in status quo—barring a slight modification of the climacteric scenes which enhances the action rather than detracting from the denouement as "legitimately" played.

As a mystery drama embellished with all the tricks for initiating the desired audience reaction and played by a superb cast, "The Cat Creeps" leaves little to be desired in this especial type of entertainment—if your heart's good! Heading the list of luminaries, and bearing the brunt of all the machinations calculated to refrigerate the heart of a less stalwart actress, is Helen Twelvetrees, as the legatee of an estate of some size and a fortune commensurate therewith. Miss Twelvetrees does a fine job in portraying the harassed lady of the manor, and her presence is ever delightful, regardless of the trials and tribulations that are brought down upon her.

Opposite her, and as the one who finally picks up the thread of evidence leading to the apprehension of the guilty party, is Raymond Hackett, who acquits himself nobly in spite at times of an unfortunate mouthiness in his lines.

Blanche Frederici superbly delineates Mam' Pleasant, the housekeeper, and it is a masterpiece of all that is sinister and beautifully aids in building up the proper atmosphere for the disappearance of people, the "supernatural" moving of bookcases and chairs, and long pointed fingers reaching out from apparently nowhere. Comedy relief is admirably furnished by Lilyan Tashman, in one of her smaller, though charmingly played, roles, and Elizabeth Patterson. Their lines are brought in naturally and in no way is the comedy forced or unnatural.

Supporting the feature is a collection of well selected short subjects in quite a different mood. There is Oswald, the Rabbit, as "The Singing Sap," Slim Summerville and Eddie Gribbon in an amusing A. E. F. comedy, "We, We, Marie;" and Graham McNamee newscasting for Universal.

Dr. Jane B. Coates is continuing her daily appearances, though omitted from the performance reviewed.

FOX

"RENEGADES." Fox screen adaptation of the novel, "Les Rengats," by Andre Armandy, featuring Warner Baxter, supported by Noah Beery, Myrna Loy and C. Henry Gordon. Directed by Victor Fleming. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

During the full first half of this tempestuous exposition of what might happen any day of any year under the torture of a blazing Moroccan sun, the spectator is apt to be deluded into the conviction that he is viewing just another drama of the Foreign Legion. That, however, is a wholly mistaken notion that is quickly and completely dispelled by the film's later footage.

"Renegades," while it is, to be sure, a play of bitterness and conflict with the traditions and personnel of the French Foreign Legion as its basis, plumbs far deeper into the emotional depths of men and pursues a truer and a straighter course than most fictions that have utilized the same familiar materials. When its climacteric events once get under way, they progress with surprising vigor to a tragic end that only a drama of unusual strength could make acceptable.

The central character is Deucalion, a former officer and gentleman of France, tricked into the oblivion of the desert's grueling service by a female spy who betrayed him to the enemy during the World War. Following his unscrupulous leadership are three others whose records are none too spotless—Machwurth, the German; Vologuine, the Russian aristocrat, and Biloxi, Brooklyn gunman. The sudden appearance of Eleanore, the spy, at a dress parade at which Deucalion and his comrades are being decorated for a particularly hazardous bit of sapping, sets in motion all the devilish machinery of revenge and leads to a battle climax that is as sound dramatically as it is far-flung and thrilling in its every visual quality.

Warner Baxter, as Deucalion, is a picturesque legionnaire and an even more colorful sheik when his revulsion at the heart-breaking discipline inflicted upon the regiment of the "living dead" prompts him to become a deserter, a traitor and a renegade—the three degrees of military turpitude—and lead his own legions of Riffs against the depleted ranks of his former garrison. Intelligent and forceful as his work is, it is still only the dimensions of his role, and not the manner of its interpretation, that places him at the head of the cast. By far the ablest portrayal of an extensive and excellent gallery is the Capt. Mordiconi, commander of the fortress, by C. Henry Gordon.

I have no idea who C. Henry Gordon may be, or what he may have done, but if an actor of his authority, poise and finesse has been definitely and permanently enticed to the screen, the cinema is vastly the winner.

Noah Beery has been better cast than in the role of Machwurth, the German, although the chief charge that may be lodged against him is only that he frequently neglects to sustain the dialect with which his performance is launched. Gregory Gaye and George Cooper complete the quartet as Vologuine and Biloxi, the former an emotional craven; the latter, the picture's major source of comedy. Myrna Loy is cast in the unsympathetic role of the spy—cold, calculating and conscienceless—and plays it in a manner that possibly only Jetta Goudal could improve upon.

On the stage, Fanchon and Marco's "City Service" idea serves to introduce a series of specialties that are performed at City Hall and in the Police and Fire Departments. Those participating include Shapiro & O'Malley, comedians; Seb Meza, dancer; Laddie La Monte, whom I take to be the ladder balancer; DeQuincey & Staley, Frank Sterling, instrumentalist and singer, and the Sunkist Beauties.

The star of the stage portion of the entertainment is Sam Hearn, who monologues and violins his way to a substantial personal hit. During the overture of Spanish airs, Senorita Maria Pacheco, Panaman soprano, reveals a lyric voice of purity and charm in a brief interpolated song. Ron and Don contribute a splendid Armistice organlogue.

The Fox Movietone News completes the bill.

METROPOLITAN

"THE LIFE OF THE PARTY" Warner Bros. farce-comedy, starring Winnie Lightner, supported by Irene Delroy and Jack Whiting. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Reviewed on return engagement by Don B. Reed.

Winnie's back in town again and if you've got those "unemployment blues" go out and borrow enough for a ticket to the Metropolitan and forget them. "The Life of the Party," starring Winnie Lightner, is the same picture which broke all the laugh records at the Earle a few weeks ago, so it will now proceed to do the same thing there.

There are a lot of funsters in the film. Winnie is at her best, with just the right kind of story to give her talents plenty of room for action—and does she give! But she is aided and abetted no little by Charles Butterworth and Charles Judels. They get so hilarious at times that Winnie is lost sight of in the shuffle, but she always manages to emerge with a new wisecrack at the proper moment to regain her position as the star.

What little love interest is necessary in one of these pictures, made to make you laugh—and succeeding—is furnished by Jack Whiting and Irene Delroy, the latter supplying considerable comedy, as well. It's a hokum story of two dizzy song pluggers gathering up all the fine clothes from a modiste, running off to Havana to trp to grab off a couple of millionaires and running into the usual consequences.

A screaming funny horse race which ends with Winnie doing a reverse swan dive into a puddle is one of the high spots in the adventures of the pair. However, with the aid of the hero, the villain is exposed, the girls are cleared of all wrongdoing and, as they used to subtitle the old silents, "they lived happily ever after."

Miss Lightner works like a Trojan. She clicks in every appearance. But what's the use? You know your Lightner and in this one she's at top form.

"The Intruder," a Vitaphone Variety which has plenty of humor and a surprise ending; a reel of "Believe It or Not," and the usual newsreel, with Graham McNamee announcing, complete a bill that for honest-to-goodness entertainment is hard to tie.

PALACE

"THE VIRTUOUS SIN." Paramount production based on Lajos Zilahys' play, "A Tahornok," featuring Walter Huston, Kay Francis and Kenneth MacKenna, directed by Louis Gasnier and George Cukor. Reviewed Saturday night by Mary Porter Russell.

Walter Huston has played in a greater variety of roles during his compartively brief screen career than has many a veteran of the films in long years before the camera. His Abraham Lincoln having faded from the Capital's view, he appears before us now as a Russian general of the old regime—a character surely as far removed from that of America's Civil War President in personality, manner and thought as the studio could have devised. And it is probable that no one else could have done both of them so well.

The setting of the present film is in St. Petersburg during the early stages of the World War. It is not, as might be expected, a tale of conflict between the classes, though it involves Marya, an ambitious, educated girl of the people, who has married a young scientist high above her in station, less from love than from a desire to aid him in his experiments for a life-saving serum. Just as the work is near completion he is called into military service, where his bitterness toward the machine that forces him to take life rather than save it, brings upon him a death sentence from the ruthless Gen. Platoff. Marya, to save him, contrives to win the love of the general, and finds that in doing so she has lost her own heart.

It is a provocative theme, well worked out, though the sympathies of the spectator are never gripped completely by any of the always interesting leading characters. The best episodes are the husband's denunciation of the military system and the scenes between Marya and general, including their rather humorous first meeting and their later more serious moments together.

Kay Francis was an excellent choice for Marya. With her lovely, smooth voice, her distinguished bearing and her knack of looking captivating in authentic Russian costumes, her effect on the iron-willed head of the army is believable. Kenneth McKenna is good as the husband, and Mr. Huston is splendid both as the heartless officer of the beginning of the film and the kindlier being he becomes under Marya's softening influence. The minor characters are effectively handled and the settings indicate care and expense in providing a background that looks Russian.

The comely and charming Dodge Twins, many of whose recent triumphs have been abroad, are featured in the stage revue, "Nightingale Melodies." They specialize in bird dances of the coy and stately varieties, and one of them—whether Beth or Betty will not be here said—trills a love song to her partner in skillful bird language. John Bryan sings briefly and Walter Nilsson offers stunts on trick bicycles. The DeVal Foursome are adagio dancers—three of them men, who play well with the girl member of the group with abandon.

RKO-KEITH'S

"THE SILVER HORDE." A Radio Pictures presentation of the novel by Rex Beach adapted for the screen by Wallace Smith; featuring Evelyn Brent, supported by Louis Wolheim, Joel McCrea, Raymond Hatton and Blanche Sweet Directed by George Archainbaud. Reviewed Saturday night by W. A. Whitney.

Once again an old locale returns to the screen, but this time Alaska is presented as the stamping ground of the salmon fishers and not of the seekers after more earthly fortunes. The plot, however, rings of the gold fields, but its presentation woven around the packers of canned salmon presents not only a novel slant on a well-known theme but a delightful blending of the lures of the sea and the frozen expanses of the North country.

The effort to break the autocratic arrogant canning monopoly, with a love triangle thrown in to make things more interesting, forms the basis on which Evelyn Brent delivers a beautiful and restrained characterization. Joel McCrea, whom Miss Brent helps to set up in business, hands in a very creditable piece of work and is convincing in both his amorous and his commercial encounters. And when he encounters, they stay whipped, his two fistic forays being most realistically staged and waged.

"The Silver Horde" marks the return to the screen of Blanche Sweet, as Miss Brent's charmingly blase girl friend from Nome, who puts the final crimp in what might otherwise have been a case of bigamy on the part of Gavin Gordon, the villainous financier and monopolizer of the salmon industry.

Louis Wolheim and Raymond Hatton have the comedy in their charge—and what comedy it is! A study in contrasts, with the physical attributes of the two reflected in a surprisingly amusing manner!

Jean Arthur, Purnell Pratt, Ivan Linow and William Davidson have roles that suit them and they turn in fine delineations.

Heading the list of subsidiaries is "Hard-Boiled Yeggs," which is built up in the manner of an old-time silent melodrama to which has been appended a concurrent radio "bedtime story for adults" recited in a most hilarious manner by Eddie Buzzell. Then there are "Razored in Kentucky," with Nick and Tony as the feudal tonsorial artists; Knute Rockne putting his Notre Damers through some outstanding football plays in slow motion, and a release of Pathe News.

Freddy Clark furnishes the incidental organ music, proving that the flowers funerally abundant in the vacant pit are not for him personally.

COLUMBIA

"WHOOPEE." United Artists Technicolor production adapted from the Florenz Ziegfeld, jr., musical comedy by W. A. McGuire, Walter Donaldson and Gus Kahn, starring Eddie Cantor, supported by Ethel Shutta and Eleanor Hunt. Directed by Thornton Freeland. Reviewed Saturday night (second week) by J. F. Brady.

Eddie Cantor, the personification of comedy, with an able galaxy of players, an array of catchy and well sung songs, combined with a spectacular production of the Ziegfeld type, places "Whoopee" on a pinnacle of its own, as one of the great pictures of its type so far produced.

It is, indeed, the climax of the cinema's effort to give a modern public a feature which can not fail to please the most fastidious taste, since it has every element necessary to keep the mind, the eye and the ear actively interested. It is the last word in beauty and art, being gorgeously mounted, skillfully directed and expertly photographed. Its several "parades of the beauties" are marvels.

As in all big productions, where the handling of large casts, numerous musical numbers and dances and massive settings are involved, there are bound to be noticeable slight discrepancies.

Eddie Cantor is still Eddie Cantor, but in "Whoopee" has been given much better opportunity than ever before on the screen and has taken advantage of it to make new friends. His voice is fine, his songs good, especially "My Baby Just Cares for Me"—his comedy, sure-fire.

Ethel Shutta, as the nurse, and Eleanor Hunt, as Sally Morgan, do excellent work and run close up to Cantor.

The chorus and ensemble work is done with precision and in a manner most pleasing to the eye.

A long list of players constitute the cast, including Paul Gregory, Chief Caulpolican, John Rutherford, Spencer Chanters, Will H. Philbrick, Albert Hackett and Walter Law.

There are a number of outstanding songs, "The Girl Friend of a Boy Friend of Mine," "Making Whoopee" and "I'll Still Belong to You" being among the best.

Tampico Reds Jeer At U. S. Consulate

33 Communists, Including Four Women, Held for Demonstration.

Tampico, Mexico, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Thirty-three communists, including four women, were under arrest today as the result of a demonstration before the American consulate last night.

The Reds, observing the thirteenth anniversary of the Bolshevik revolutions, paraded before the consulate and attacked the United States Government. Mexican authorities and the press. The names of Sacco and Vanzetti, whose execution by Massachusetts authorities in 1927 aroused widespread Communist protests, were shouted frequently.

Police also raided offices of the workers' Federation of Tamaulipas, charging that it was dominated by Communists and other extremists.

Student Pleads Guilty Of Damaging Police Car

Francis Patrick Gunn, Georgetown University dental student, pleaded guilty in Police Court yesterday, before Judge Isaac R. Hitt, of destroying public property. The charge followed the damaging of a Second Precinct automobile Thursday night. Judge Hitt reserved sentence, permitting the young man his liberty under bond.

While Gunn, according to police, ripped off a number of their car's fixtures, the information accused him merely of taking the spotlight. Police declare Gunn's act was prompted by the fact he was jammed into a close parking space by the police car, which had been left near Fourteenth and M streets northwest. Gunn was arrested Friday at the college in the presence of his class, numbering 200 students.

German Workers To Have Wages Cut

Metal Industry Arbitrators Decide on General Reductions.

Berlin, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The board of arbitration, assigned to settle the Berlin metal industry dispute, today decreed a general 3 per cent wage reduction effective November 17, with a 6 per cent cut for workers under 18 years of age and 8 per cent for adult tradesmen effective January 19, 1931.

The arbitrators thereby supported the Bruening cabinet's efforts to bring about a general downward trend in prices. The board deferred to full cut until after the first of the year. The metal industrialists have pledged themselves to continue lowering their prices.

The appointment of the arbitration board followed a strike of 126,000 Berlin metal workers October 15, protesting an 8 per cent reduction. After the walkout had complicated the German economic and political situation, as it coincided with the opening of the Reichstag, the workers voted to return to their jobs October 30 and await an arbitration ruling.

Baby Escapes Well Unhurt.

Salinax, Utah, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Three-year-old Kathryn Andrewason was little the worse today from a tumble into 6 feet of water at the bottom of a 60-foot well. The child was rescued after her high dive by Lamonte Anderson, 22, who descended into the shaft by means of an iron pipe.

MAJ. C. R. GARY DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

MASONS TO HOLD RITES

Descendant of a signer of the Declaration of Independence, Maj. C. Rodney Gary, for many years connected with the War Department, died yesterday morning after a long illness at his home, 1735 New Hampshire avenue northwest.

He was a great-great-grandnephew of Caesar Rodney, of Delaware, signer of the Declaration of Independence. His great-great-grandfather, the brother of Caesar Rodney, was Col. Thomas Rodney, of American Revolutionary War fame. He also was the great-grandson of Caesar A. Rodney, Attorney General under Presidents Jefferson and Madison.

Was Native of Texas.

On his father's side he was descended from Col. Richard Lee, first attorney general of Virginia, and of the Dibrell and Watson families of Virginia.

A native of Plantersville, Tex., he was educated in private schools and for two years attended Texas A. and M. College before entering the United States Military Academy in 1883. After three years there he withdrew and came to Washington, where he made his home continuously. He was subsequently commissioned a major of the Fourth Battalion, District Militia, by President Cleveland, and later a major of the Second Battalion by President Harrison.

Served in Ordnance Office.

He served in the ordnance office of the War Department for many years, but was employed in its finance department when he was retired for disability.

He is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Paul Anderson, of this city, and both Miss Wilmuth Gary and Mrs. Emil A. Gathmann, of Catonsville, Md.

Funeral services will be conducted at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at Hysong's funeral home, 1302 N street northwest, with interment in Congressional Cemetery under the direction of Dawson Lodge of Masons, of which he had been a member for many years.

Felons Back Out Of 'Suicide Pact'

Three Have 'Good Excuses' After Quartet Vainly Tries to Escape.

Ossining, N. Y., Nov. 8 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—All four of the prisoners who tried to shoot their way out of Sing Sing last Saturday night had made a pact to commit suicide, prison officials revealed today. Harry Gordon did kill himself, but the other three had excellent excuses, which they confided to prison authorities afterward.

William Lapere was about to shoot himself through the head when he thought of Harry Cowan, who tried to commit suicide after shooting Edith Burton in Brooklyn, years ago, and only blinded himself. Afraid of a similar fate, Lapere desisted.

As for Herbert Davis, he said his revolver jammed at the crucial moment. Edward Ryan insisted he tried three times to shoot himself, but not one of the cartridges in his revolver would go off, although the hammer pierced them.

Clare Eames, Stage Star, Is Dead in London Hospital

American Actress Rose to Fame as Mary, Queen of Scots, in John Drinkwater's Play, "Mary Stuart," in 1921.

London, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Claire Eames, the American actress who rose to fame as Mary, Queen of Scots, in John Drinkwater's play, "Mary Stuart," died today in a nursing home here after a surgical operation.

It was in 1921 that she made her first notable success in the Drinkwater play, but she had been on the stage three years before that, perfecting the art which was to bring her success on both sides of the Atlantic.

Three years ago she came to London in "The Silver Cord," written by her husband, Sidney Howard, and scored an instantaneous success. She returned two years later in her husband's "The Sacred Flame."

England never saw her in "Macbeth," in which she appeared with James K. Hackett in America, but for the past few years the actress had made her home in England, and it was here that she was first taken ill.

She underwent one operaton last week and submitted to the second, from which she did not rally, last night.

Clare Eames was born and educated in the United States and was married there in 1921, shortly after the opening of her husband's play, "The Sword." They had one daughter, now 4 years old.

Recently Mr. Howard instituted divorce proceedings in America, charging desertion.

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Clare Jeness Eames, actress, who died in London today, was a niece of Mrs. Hiram Percy Maxim, wife of the Hartford inventor. She was born here in 1894 and lived here until she was 11, when she went with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Eames, to live in Cleveland. Seven years ago she married Sidney Howard, playwright, who had been an ace in the war. She was a granddaughter of former Gov. William T. Hamilton of Maryland.

Judgment of $11,124 Filed Against Jacobs

Judgement of $11,124.73 has been recorded in District Supreme Court against Edgar L. Jacobs, of 3501 Rittenhouse street northwest, former cashier of the Paramount-Publix Corporation, who recently pleaded guilty to an indictment charging the embezzlement of approximately $7,000. He has not been sentenced.

The judgment was taken before Justice Frederick L. Siddons in the suit filed against Jacobs by the corporation. Recovery of $70,000 was sought. Legal action followed Jacobs' admission he was indebted to the company to the extent specified in the judgment. Attorneys Frank F. Nesbit and C. E. Pledger, jr., appeared for the company.

Baby Chimpanzees To Aid Cold Cure

Savants at Johns Hopkins Find Apes React Like Humans in This Disease.

Baltimore, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—To the menagerie at Johns Hopkins Medical School are to be added eight baby chimpanzees, which will be used to determine how the common cold starts and how it may be cured or controlled.

Several girl volunteers were used as subjects of experiments last June, but the chimpanzees, members of the ape family, which have been found to react to colds like humans, are said to be more amenable to experiment than humans, in some respects. Three gibbons have been used for several months in the five-year research being conducted by a group at the medical school whose work was financed in 1928 by a $195,000 fund established by the Chemical Foundation.

Dr. Perrin H. Long, one of the research staff, and Dr. James A. Doull, Cleveland, until August head of the Common Cold Research, have just announced the finding that the cold is transmitted by a virus.

Red Organ in Berlin Suspended for Week

Berlin, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The Communist newspaper Rote Fahne, today was ordered to cease publication for seven days on the ground that it had violated the law for the protection of the Republic.

The paper published an article glorifying the tactics of a Communist named Heidrich, who had attacked the former police president, Karl Zoergiebel.

100,000 HAVE SEEN INDUSTRIAL SHOW

TYPISTS WIN HONORS

What was declared to have been the most successful of the six annual industrial expositions sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce closed at the Washington Auditorium last night with attendance figures for the week totaling well over 100,000.

A highlight of the final session was the presentation of prizes in the typewriting and stenographic contests, held annually. Winners in each of the three classes—novice, junior and senior—were presented with silver loving cups donated by the Chamber of Commerce. Local merchants contributed additional prizes.

The winners were: Senior typewriting contest, Miss Eunice Graham, 104 Park avenue, Takoma Park, Md.; senior shorthand contest, Mrs. Anne B. Cushman, 5428 Hawthorne street northwest; junior typing contest, John R. Lazar, 1504 Twenty-first street northwest; junior shorthand competition, Miss Alma Gemeny, 31 Franklin street northeast; novice typing contest, Miss Katherine E. Wells, Cherrydale, Va.; novice shorthand contest, Miss Marjorie A. Walker, 760 Rock Creek Church road. Runners-up in all divisions received certificates.

Rudolph Jose, president of the Chamber of Commerce, announced that he was "more than well pleased" with the exposition. The next year's exhibition has already been authorized, he added.

"This year more than ever before," Mr. Jose said, "the industrial exposition has proved the essential soundness of the idea in back of it, and revealed the interest which the people of Washington have in the progress and development of the National Capital in an economic way.

"The attendance this year has broken all previous records. The interest of the crowds in the various exhibits was keener. The show itself was more expressive of the city's forward movement.

"The board of directors has already approved the seventh annual industrial exposition, which we will hold next year. We will immediately begin plans for that show in the hope that in 1931 we will be able to do even a better job than the splendid one accomplished this year."

Lincoln Death Train Pilot Dies.

Redlands, Calif., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—George W. Wrightson, 88, who piloted Abraham Lincoln's funeral train, is dead. Wrightson, born in Yorkshire, England, was an engineer on the New York Central Line for 53 years. Among his survivors is Mrs. Addie Boyle, New York, a daughter.

HANOVER OIL LANDS BOUGHT BY PRUSSIA

FOUR WELLS BROUGHT IN

Berlin, Nov. 8 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Oil producing lands have been discovered in the Province of Pelheim, in Prussia, it was announced today, but American petroleum interests, which already control about 90 per cent of the petroleum sales organization in Germany, are not to be permitted to gain complete control of the production in German fields.

The State of Prussia, working through a Prussian mining and smelting company known as "Preussat," which belongs to the state, has bought extensive tracts of land in Hanover, where there are already four producing wells, with two others being drilled. Preussat also plans the erection of a refinery.

The action of Preussat, which has been in contemplation for some time, was accelerated by the fact that Harry F. Sinclair's North European Oil Corporation recently secured drilling rights on many thousands of acres in Oldenburg, Mecklenburg, Brunswick and Hanover and also in South Germany. The German Sinclair corporation, with headquarters at Cologne, also possesses a large number of filling stations and is steadily increasing its holdings, although it has hitherto bought no producing wells.

Germany now covers only about 6 per cent of her petroleum requirements through her own production and the production just acquired by the state will hardly exceed 30,000 tons annually or about one-sixth of the country's annual requirements.

Much hope, however, is placed on deeper drilling since existing wells are only about 1,000 meters deep. It is also argued that if American interests artificially hold down prices to exert pressure on German refiners the public will be the gainer and if prices rise the state will make a profit.

MASS OF TAXICABS CUT BY REGULATION

500 CEASE OPERATION

As a result of the recent police regulation requiring all taxicabs to be marked with the name of the individual or company operating the service, the number of taxicabs on the streets of Washington has been reduced by at least 10 per cent. Of more than 3,000 cabs in the District, at least 500 are reported to have ceased operation in the past month.

When unmetered service was started several months ago, at the time the cut-rate war began with most taxicabs operating at a flat rate of 35 cents within certain prescribed zones, numerous private automobile owners, mostly Government employes, took out hack licenses and put their private cars into taxi service in their leisure hours.

For a time it was a lucrative side line. There was no occasion to disfigure private cars with meters, and all a hacker had to do to convert his cab into a pleasure vehicle was to remove the "35c" sign from under the windshield wiper and change the "H" license plates for a set with some other serial letter.

Regulation Changes Custom.

Clerks would drive their small sedans down to the office in the morning. At the end of the office day they would clamp a set of "H" tags over their private plates and stick the "35c" sign under the windshield wiper or on the car doors and become full-fledged hackers. When they wanted to use their cars for pleasure driving on Sundays or holidays, they could do so without anything to indicate that they were taking the wife and children out for a drive in a hack.

But the recent police regulation changed all that. The part-time hackers were faced with two alternatives; they could either comply with the regulation and identify their automobiles indelibly as taxicabs, or they could cease hacking and use their cars for pleasure only.

Some of these owners debated the matter and found the added profits from spare-time hacking sufficient to offset any loss of prestige which might accrue from having their names, or some names at any rate, painted on the sides of their cars. They continued in the hacking business, complying with the regulations.

Many Quit Business.

But the large majority of the part-time hackers, whose cars were their personal pride and joy, which could not be defaced by anything so crass as an identification which would stamp them permanently as taxicabs, decided in favor of pleasure rather than business. They discarded their "H" tags and left the hacking business to the hackers, according to officials of the police and license departments.

A few, perhaps not realizing the letter of the law, obtained removable letters with which they adorn their cars for hacking purposes and which they remove when driving for pleasure. But although the regulation has not yet been tested on this count, it is the opinion of police officials that the requirement provides that letters must be painted on the sides of the cabs. And painted letters can not be removed as can those made of adhesive tape.

Officials of the District bureau of licenses report that since the first of the year more than 9,000 automobile owners have returned their tags to the bureau under the law which requires that all owners who sell or dispose of their automobiles must report the transaction and turn in their tags.

Although the exact proportion of "H" tags in these 9,000 is not known, it is declared to be "substantial," indicating that many hackers have gone out of the business. This, however, is not a guiding factor in construing the situation, inasmuch as the vast majority of automobile owners actually do not turn in "dead" tags. They are content to remove the tags from cars they sell and let it go at that.

Couple Ask $35,000 In Traffic Accident

Damages totaling $35,000 are sought in two suits filed yesterday in District Supreme Court against Charles P. Ryan, of 2433 Third street northeast. Mrs. Mary C. Parks and her husband, William A. Parks, both of 820 East Capitol street, are the plaintiffs. Mrs. Parks seeks $25,000 for alleged personal injuries, while the husband asks $10,000 damages for loss of his wife's services and medical expenses.

The suits allege that Mrs. Parks was injured when the automobile in which she was riding August 25, 1929, was struck by an automobile driven by Ryan. The accident is said to have occurred between North Beach and South Beach, Md. Ryan's car is alleged to have crashed into the other machine from the rear, causing the latter to overturn. Attorneys Simon, Koenigsberger, Young & Brez appear for the plaintiffs.

Lame Boy Hopes to Play Football at Notre Dame

Jerry Collins, 9, Shows Courageous Ambition on Crutches.

JERRY COLLINS.

Courage!

At Franklin Field in Philadelphia yesterday, 75,000 rabid followers of King Football rose from their seats to pay tribute to the courage and prowess of 22 young men representing the Universities of Pennsylvania and Notre Dame.

Most of them were there to watch Knute Kockne's fighting Irish from South Bend, unbeaten in two years and idols of a Nation gone gridiron-crazy. The marveled as the sturdy sons of Erin, named Savoldi, Schwartz, Brill and Carideo, whirled, pranced, kicked and passed their way up and down the field. A courageous, hard-fighting eleven, they said. And they were.

But their courage, unquestioned, was that of health, backed by confidence in their teacher, old "Rock." And as Notre Dame cheers rang out across Franklin Field, out at 1736 Eighteenth street northwest, in Apartment 206, a 9-year-old boy with far more courage than the best of Rockne's men would dare to claim, thrilled with each play and groaned or cheered as the Notre Dame fortunes rose and fell as the contest progressed.

Hopes to Fight for Rockne.

If courage and the desire to succeed can accomplish it, that boy some day about ten years from today will hear his named cracked out on the end of the long whip of a Notre Dame cheer. He'll be in there battling for Knute Rockne and a school that is almost as dear to him as life, although he's never seen the place.

Jerry Collins—there's a name that will fit well in the line-up of the Irish. And that's the name of the boy, who, his left leg in a cast, hobbling around his home on crutches, behind in his school work because of long periods in hospitals, has hitched his wagon to the star called Knute Rockne. As a side line, this game little bundle of humanity wants to be a lawyer. He probably will.

Jerry's discovery came about through a letter he wrote to W. M. Freeman, member of the Kiwanis Club, following a visit of the Kiwanis nurse to his home to arrange that he attend a school for crippled children. Jerry wants to learn. As he puts it, "I don't want to be a numbskull all my life." And thankful for the chance to attend school he wrote Mr. Freeman as follows:

Most of Life in Hospital.

Dear Mr. Freeman: Mr. Kamerow came to see me one day and he told me what a fine man you are. I am 9 years old and have spent most of my time in the hospital. I hear you like to know what boys want to do when they grow up. I want to be a football player and a lawyer and I want to go to Notre Dame. I have not yet had a chance to go to school. I would like to write more but it is rather hard work for me, as you can see. I hope I will some time have a chance to see you."

So a Post reporter went to see Jerry, the boy who wants to be a lawyer and a Notre Dame football star. As the little fellow, on his crutches opened the door, the reporter saw across the room a magazine rack. And right in front was "The Notre Dame Catalogue."

As the reporter stepped inside Jerry picked up the magazine he had been reading. It was turned to an article by Knute Rockne on "Stabilizing the Line." Then Mrs. Jerome Collins, Jerry's mother, came into the room and here's her story of her son.

"Jerry was born in St. Augustine, Fla. Later we moved to Jacksonville and lived close to the stadium there. Jerry used to watch the machines go by, decorated with pennants and with pans and cans trailing from the rear. Then he started in school and began to take an interest in football. But while he was in the first grade he became ill and his left leg was affected. Since then he has spent a large part of his time in hospitals. First in Florida and then in Chicago. He has always admired Knute Rockne and the Notre Dame team. While he was in a Chicago hospital, his father wrote for a catalogue.

Priest Writes to Him.

The priest who sent it, also wrote to Jerry every few weeks, occasionally sending him a pennant or some other little football token. That simply made Jerry that much more enthusiastic about Notre Dame. We've only been in Washington about three months, but Jerry hasn't missed a thing that has been written about Notre Dame. We wouldn't have known where to send Jerry to school if the Kiwanis Club had not told us about the Crippled Children's School."

Here Jerry broke in on the proceedings and in a breathless, child-like sort of way let the interviewer know that "every night when dad comes home from work on the Arlington Memorial Bridge we play football in the house; and I kicked a football the other day with all my might and it didn't hurt my leg; and I'm going to see 'Maybe Its Love' at the Tivoli because the all-American football team plays in it and gee, I'm glad you came because I never thought I'd ever get to have my picture in the paper."

Mrs. Collins reports that Jerry is responding to treatment for his leg. The doctor now allows him to put a little weight on it. It will be a long time before he can run and play like other boys his age, but he'll get there. And when he does, look out Notre Dame, here comes an all-American.

So if you pick up The Washington Post some November afternoon in 1940, glance at the Notre Dame line-up and see where Collins is playing half back—that will be Jerry.

Because he has courage.

PLAN TO SOFTEN CAR JAIL TERMS IS SEEN

Bride May Ask Year's Limit Rule on Third Speeding Offence Sentence.

OTHER SHIFTS FORESEEN

Elimination of mandatory jail sentences for third offense speeding and other traffic law violations is expected to be recommended to the District Commissioners by William W. Bride, corporation counsel.

Congressional action will be necessary to carry out the proposed softening of the traffic law and amendment will be one of several legislative proposals which will be submitted to the city heads for transmission to Congress at the coming session. Mr. Bride is expected to submit his legislative program to the Commissioners in the next week or ten days.

Substance of Change.

It is proposed to amend the traffic law so as to give the judges discretion in imposing jail sentences. Such a change was recommended by the Police Court judges themselves some time ago. They said that the severity of existing penalties made conviction of accused persons much more difficult to get than would be the case if jail sentences were not made mandatory.

Another important change expected to be recommended to limit to one year the period within which persons convicted of speeding may be penalized for second or third offenses. Under the present law there is no time limit within which second or third offense penalties are assessed. For example a person convicted of speeding a third time over a period of 10 years is punished to the same extent as is a person convicted of third offense speeding within a period of a week. Mr. Bride would limit the period to second and third offenses committed within a year of the first conviction.

Final Conference Tuesday.

Several other laws are under study and will be reported on to the Commissioners. Several conferences of the corporation counsel staff have been held over the last few weeks and a final conference is expected to be held Tuesday.

Among the laws the corporation counsel is expected to recommend be amended are the bastardy law, the loan shark law, the Borland law, the license code and the insurance code.

Under existing law the father of a bastard child is required to contribute to its support only to the age of 14. Another law however, requires the child to go to school until 16 years of age. The existing law is not regarded as a modern one and the next Congress probably will be asked to change it materially. Because of the short session which begins next month, however, only a few changes will be recommended. One will extend 16 years the age limit within which the father must support his natural children.

TRAIN-ROBBER HUNT SPURRED BY REWARD

California Officials Strive to Capture Bandits and Get $10,000 Reward.

ABANDONED AUTO FOUND

Oakland, Calif., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—With a $10,000 reward to spur them on—$2,000 for each outlaw—officers of the San Francisco Bay region spread a net today for the five men who yesterday held up and robbed a Southern Pacific mail car of $55,700 at Nobel Station, a suburb.

Oakland, Berkeley and San Jose detectives and sheriffs' deputies, aided by the State department of criminal identification at Sacramento, joined in the hunt. The sedan used by the robbers was found in Berkeley today near the University of California campus, where, presumably, it was abandoned during the night.

It was taken to a garage and three excellent fingerprints on it were photographed. These prints were sent to the State bureau of criminal identification to be checked with records of criminals.

Meanwhile, members of the train crew who were held at bay, tried with indifferent success to identify photographs at Sacramento of persons suspected of the crime.

Taking the lead in the hunt were United States postal inspectors, who said that the Government provided a reward of $2,000 for the capture of each participating in a mail robbery under such conditions.

LEAK IN WATER MAIN CAUSES CAVE-IN OF STREET

A leak in a water main undermined the pavement on Jackson street, between Twentieth and Twenty-second streets northeast, yesterday afternoon, causing a break in a gas main, depriving houses in the vicinity of gas and water and causing a cave-in of the pavement. Traffic also was blocked.

Throngs Attend Flower Exhibit

More Than 2,000 Attracted by New Varieties of Chrysanthemums.

More than 2,000 persons yesterday filed through the greenhouses at Fourteenth and B streets northwest, to view the Department of Agriculture's twenty-ninth annual chrysanthemum show.

Arthur M. Hyde, Secretary of Agriculture, and other Government officials attended the opening of the exhibit.

President and Mrs. Hoover have always shown interest in the annual flower shows and it has been their custom, when no cards were sent out for a preview, to attend the exhibit Sunday following the opening. Should they follow their custom, the Chief Executive and the First Lady will visit the gardens some time this afternoon. Several new varieties of chrysanthemums are on exhibit for the first time. The show will continue until November 16.

Battery Station Is Robbed.

John L. Du Fief, owner of a battery shop at 2731 M street northwest, last night told police that while examining a car in front of his place of business his office was entered and $41 stolen from the cash register. Seventh Precinct police are investigating.

CAPITAL ECHOES

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD

FOR three days and nights last week the telegraph machines in The Post editorial department poured forth the returns on Tuesday's hectic election—"leads" on the relative standing of the Republicans and Democrats, bulletins on a senatorial race here or there, and, in between these, brief flashes denoting the election of this or that candidate for the House. Here is a sample of one of the latter:

"Sixth Maryland—Lewis."

That would be all, just three words. Yet what a lot lay behind them. In the Sixth District of Maryland David J. Lewis, a Democrat, had been elected to the House. He had beaten an old rival. For the first time in 13 years Frederick N. Zihlman, the man he had defeated, was out of a political job.

• • • •

FOR one familiar with Capitol Hill, the brief flashes that tumbled from the telegraph machine were like so many acts in an intense and rushing drama.

"Fourth Wisconsin—Schaefer."

As that came through, one fancied that he could hear a far-away roar, the voice of big John Schaefer, the loudest man in the House of Representatives.

For a time, there was a succession of flashes from New York: "Second New York—Brunner;" "Third New York—Lindsay;" "Fourth New York—Cullen;" "Fifth New York—Somers," and so on. That was the Tammany gang marching back to Capitol Hill.

"Ninth Texas—Mansfield."

This conjured up a picture of a lovable man who never marches, and who never will march—Representative Joseph J. Mansfield (Democrat), of Texas. Mansfield is a cripple, and moves in and out of the House chamber in a wheel chair. Notwithstanding his affliction, he has one of the best attendance records in the House.

• • • •

AND now a batch of returns from Philadelphia. William R. Coyle, of the Thirtieth District, is re-elected to the House. But he wouldn't be if he hadn't changed his residence some years ago. Coyle was born in voteless Washington, D. C., but moved to Pennsylvania after reaching manhood. Incidentally, another of those reelected—Patrick J. Carley, of New York—was born in Ireland.

Here is a new member whose name is likely to stump Pat Haltigan, the House reading clerk. He is Frederick C. Loufbourow, elected to fill a vacancy in one of two House seats alloted to Utah. And, speaking of unusual names, here is Thomas A. Yon, of Florida, coming back for another term; and along with him Adolph J. Sabath and James T. Igoe, both of Illinois.

For some five other members of the Illinois delegation, however, the telegraphic returns spell disaster. Edward E. Denison, who was indicted here on liquor charges, is defeated by a Democrat, Kent Keller; Elliot W. Sproul, who held the late Martin B. Madden in his arms when the latter died at the Capitol, is ousted by a Democrat by the name of Kelly, while Stanley Kunz, the only Democrat to lose his seat, falls before Peter C. Granata, a Republican. Kunz had been involved in a passport scandal.

• • • •

NOWHERE were the returns so avidly watched as they were at the headquarters of the Democratic national committee. For a year and a half Jouett Shouse and Charley Michelson had been working and looking toward that day.

What was their reaction to the returns? The truth is that they got as many shocks and as many thrills out of them as most other persons.

Not that they were surprised at the result. They honestly expected that. What surprised them was the way in which that result was achieved. For examples, the two States in which they expected to pick up House seats—Massachusetts and New York—contributed not a single one. On the other hand, Illinois, Indiana and Missouri came through with more seats than had been counted on.

But the biggest surprise to the Democratic strategists was the defeat of Senator Henry Allen, of Kansas, by the Democratic candidate, George McGill. Not only was it the biggest surprise, but it was the most delightful one, for if there was one Republican senator the Democrats wanted to "get," it was Allen.

Girl Reserves Renovate Toys for Poor Children

Busily plying paint brush and hammer, Girl Reserves of Washington, have renovated more than 3,000 discarded toys for distribution to the poor at Christmas. The supply, however, is held to be inadequate, and the public is requested to notify the organization of any old toys that are available. The Girl Reserves will send for the gifts.

Toy repair headquarters have been established on the roof of the Y. W. C. A. Building at Seventeenth and K streets, and those having contributions are asked to telephone Miss Elsa Peterson, at Metropolitan 2102. Boy Scouts are cooperating with the Girl Reserves in efforts to secure and renovate more than 5,000 toys for eleven of the city's children's institutions.

The negative side will be argued by a group of lawyers, Charles Scott Sykes, J. Mark Trice and Edwin A. Mooers. Mr. Mooers was a member of the committee appointed to revise the code of laws of the District.

The Truth About Prohibition Espionage on CAPITOL HILL

George L. Cassiday, Congressional bootlegger, whom Roger Butts was instructed to watch in an effort to catch him making a sale of liquor in the Senate Office Building.
WHY did Vice President Curtis order a prohibition agent to spend four months in the Senate Office Building to spy on bootleg liquor purchasers? . . . What were the results of this investigation? . . . How was it accomplished? . . . The answers to these questions provide a narrative of exceptional interest and a natural sequel to the recent Post revelations in regard to the bootlegging activities of the famous "Man in the Green Hat."
Trapping "The Man in the Green Hat"
By ROGER BUTTS—The Man Who Did It
After Vice President Curtis had himself revealed the planting of a prohibition agent in the Senate Office Building, The Washington Post located Butts and obtained this unusual series of articles, relating his experiences while endeavoring to catch George L. Cassiday in the act of making a sale . . . He tells of work in the stationery room, of meeting various public figures, and his efforts to gain the confidence of the man he was instructed to watch. How he overcame suspicion, and the facts that he later learned, are revealed for the first time in this amazing story . . . No one who has followed the recent articles by Maj. Maurice Campbell and by "The Man in the Green Hat" will wish to miss a single paragraph—and it will prove as interesting to every other Washington citizen.

NEGROES TO DISCUSS ANTILYNCHING BILL

CALL ISSUED BY NEILL

Advisability of pressure to be brought on Congress favoring anti-lynching legislation will be the subject of discussion of the general assembly of various organizations opposed to the lynching evil, on the 24th and 25th of this month in connection with the meeting of the combined National Race Congress and Equal Rights League, which will meet at John Wesley Church, Fourteenth and Corcoran streets northwest.

A call for the meeting, issued by James L. Neill, secretary, cited the increase in number of lynchings during the past year, and urged every Negro organization to send representatives "that the country may be made to know that the race which alone is lynched deeply feels the danger and resents the cruelty and debasement of these American atrocities."

Elements in Congress.

The congress will organize itself independently of the Equal Rights League, or any other organization. Among its constituent elements is expected the Southern General Conference Commission on Cooperation of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, which recently issued an appeal to all pastors within its denomination "to cry aloud against this crime of crimes until every community is determined that it must be ended once for all."

The commission, which met in Atlanta, expressed the opinion that the situation is nationally and internationally serious in the extreme, and called on officers of the law and other citizens to "wage determined and unrelenting war upon this blighting survival of barbarism."

"It is obvious," the commission further stated, "that in many cases officers under oath to uphold the law have weakly or willingly yielded to the mob, thus becoming equally guilty with the actual lynchers themselves. Such officials should be made to feel the full weight of public execration, and to answer legally for their breach of public trust. We call upon all good citizens and upon the executive and judicial departments of the several States to do their utmost to bring such recreant officials to account in the courts of justice and at the bar of outraged public opinion."

Meet in Chattanooga.

Another group expected to join the congress is the Southern Antilynching Conference, to be held in Chattanooga tomorrow under the Southern provisional organization committee of the American Labor Congress, which will seek to have representatives of the American Federation of Labor to join with them, and will cooperate with the International Labor Defense.

Activity of the race congress is expected to be supplemented later by a special antilynching program of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, which organized and engaged in opposition to candidates for the United States Congress in the recent elections when they failed to state their intention to vote for the extermination of lynching in America if elected.

Hagerstown Plans Aid for Jobless

Municipal Works Is Canvassed for New Construction During Winter.

Special to The Washington Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 8.—Mayor Reuben Munsey and members of the city council today conferred with a group of leading businessmen relative to municipal work that might be started this winter to relieve unemployment here. Prior to the meeting Mayor Munsey announced that the street department would keep its entire force of approximately 100, most of who are usually laid off during the winter, at work.

A number of small projects will be started as soon as it becomes too cold to construct streets. The committee which met with the city officials today, headed by Judge Frank G. Wagaman, president of the local welfare federation, urged the city to complete its sewerage system this winter. This would provide work for 300 unskilled laborers for approximately three months.

Fifty thousand dollars, interest free, has been offered to the city by Thomas W. Pangborn, local manufacturer, to use on any project that will relieve the unemployment situation. A recent registration revealed 867 unemployed in Hagerstown, most of whom are unskilled workers.

BAIL DENIED WIFE WHO KILLED MATE

Woman in Charlottesville Claims Self-Defense in Shooting.

HER DAUGHTER SILENT

Special to The Washington Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 8.—Late this afternoon bail was refused Mrs. Essie C. Smith, who last night poured a volley of revolver bullets into the body of her husband, John Alexander Smith, Chesapeake & Ohio fireman, killing him instantly.

The tragedy occurred in the second story of the Smith home on Lexington avenue, the only other person in the house at the time being a 15-year-old daughter, Clarice. Upon reaching the scene, police found in one room a large pool of blood and five bullet marks on a wall; in a second, one bullet hole in the floor, and in the third, Smith's body lay crumpled in blood. Examination revealed a bullet in the pit of the stomach, two in the back, and wounds in both arms, besides glancing shots across the forehead and chest.

Except for Mrs. Smith's terse statement to the police that she shot in defense of herself and her daughter, investigation today failed to throw any additional light on a possible motive for the slaying. The daughter made no comment to the investigators.

The position of the wounds on the body lead to the belief that the husband made a hopeless gesture of shielding himself with his arms, but finally turned his back and left a trail of blood as he staggered across the hall. Police said Mrs. Smith had blood stains on her clothing and face, but appeared completely composed.

Besides his wife, daughter and son, Furman, 19, Smith is survived by one brother, William, of this city.

Cheshire Quality Lags As Bridge Hits Farms

London, Nov. 8 (A.F.).—If your next slab of Cheshire cheese seems a bit lacking in quality, blame the bridge-playing wives of farmers. On them is placed responsibility for hindering the empire in its efforts to maintain the standard of English cheese throughout the world.

Reformers, who are taking steps, hold that too much cream is skimmed from the milk set aside for cheese making. This cream then is used by the farm wives to make butter, which they sell to pay their bridge losses.

MOVE SEEN TO END STRIKE IN DANVILLE

Union Leaders Again State Willingness to Confer With Firm Head.

HINT NEW YORK PARLEY

Special to The Washington Post.

Danville, Va., Nov. 8.—A renewed expression of willingness on the part of textile union leaders to confer with H. R. Fitzgerald, president of the Dan River Mills, on the present labor dispute, caused a belief tonight that steps to that end are being taken by those in charge of the strike.

"We may have somthieng on that later," said one closely identified with the labor activities, but he was unable to say more than that.

Coupled with this report was another that the committee of the United Textile Workers of America met in New York yesterday with a number of other labor officials with a view to finding some means of bringing about a solution of issues which have brought idleness to the great majority of Danville's mill workers. Local union officials had no information on the subject, but had heard that there is a new movement to bring about mediation, notwithstanding the declaration of the mill president earlier in the strike that "there is nothing to mediate."

This has always been viewed by union leaders as a somewhat puzzling statement, it is said, and has been accepted in some quarters as meaning that since the mill gates were closed the morning after the strike it indicated a delayed decision by the mill management to close the plants in view of market conditions.

There was no change in the strike situation over night. Another parade was held at Schoolfield last night, several hundred persons, according to Chief of Police Cole, marching through the village.

"There was some cheering and hollering," the police chief said, "and they stopped for a minute of two before certain houses, but there was no disorder."

Capital Jews to Voice Protests on Britain

Protests at the British policy toward the Jewish Homeland Movement in Palestine will be voiced tomorrow night at a mass meeting of Washington Jewry at the Jewish Community Center. Jacob DeHaas, chairman of the administrative committee of the Zionist organization, and Isaac Hamlin, secretary to the Palestine labor committee, will represent the national movement.

Dr. Abram Simon, Rabbi Solomon H. Metz and Louis E. Speigler will speak and Isidore Hershfield, former chairman of the United Palestine Appeal here, will preside.

White Way Wisdom

By BIDE DUDLEY

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Mae West, buxom blonde actress, who served ten happy days at the prison on Welfare Island a couple of years ago for having written and acted in "Sex," is still imbued with her own particular brand of rambunctious frankness. The jail sentence, which Mae declares gave her a million dollars' worth of wonderful publicity, didn't slow her up one whit. Not only did she go ahead and appear in "Diamond Lil," which brought her no trouble, and write "Pleasure Man," which was raided, but she has since acted again in "Sex" in other cities and now she has branched out as the author of a book.

The novel bears the title of "Babe Gordon," and is published by the Macauley Co. Originally Lowell Brentano had an idea his firm would like to issue "Babe Gordon" but, after studying the manuscript closely, he bowed out and the book went to the other concern. Frankly, "Babe Gordon" was not meant for home and fireside reading. As Miss West puts it, Babe is "just a prize fighter's tart."

But Babe is more than that. She is a young blonde who has neither morals nor money and uses the absence of the first to gain the latter. Her friends are racketeers of all sorts—dope peddlers, bootleggers, hijackers and whatever else the underworld can offer in the way of live wires. She has no use for the penniless bum or tightwad.

All through the book, Babe, in her looseness, is glorified, and to a hardened old-timer like me, there is a certain amount of interest attached to her machinations. But Babe isn't going to receive any bouquets from people who still think life should be lived cleanly. In fact, I am sitting here waiting to see just what the outcome of the publication of the novel is to be.

One thing is certainly evident from her doings—Mae doesn't care two hoots about the conventions. Or at least, so she would have you believe.

Roars at "Roar China."

AT the conclusion of the first performance of the Theater Guild's play, "Roar, China," at the Martin Beck Theater, the other night somebody dropped a half-pint bottle of whisky from the balcony and it exploded in the aisle. Immediately a pungent odor spread through the vicinity. Texas Guinan, just leaving her seat, smiled and chirped:

"Prewar stuff, or I'll be durned!"

A dramatic critic, seated nearby, bowed to her and replied: "You're absolutely right, Miss Guinan."

SPEAKING of the Theater Guild, it has two new plays it will present soon. These, in addition to "Roar, China," and "Elizabeth, the Queen," which are current! Mr. Harris believes the present season will prove a fine one for him. He is the producer of "Once in a Lifetime," which is a pronounced hit.

Florence Reed's Next.

FLORENCE REED, who hasn't appeared on the New York stage since "The Shanghai Gesture," is preparing to act in another punch play called "Purity." It is by Rene Wachthausen, whoever he or she is, adapted from the French by Ralph Roeder. The star's role, it is promised, will be entirely different from anything she has ever essayed heretofore. The production will be made by the Messrs. Shubert.

It was through a coincidence that Mr. Lee Shubert engaged Miss Reed for the play. For a year she had been reading manuscripts, seeking a suitable vehicle for herself, but none appeared to her until she ran across "Purity." This play struck her fancy and she immediately announced she would act in it. Then, however, she discovered that the American rights were owned by Mr. Shubert, who had been wondering who would be the girl for the leading role. A conference resulted and soon the contracts were signed.

GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY LISTS ITS LECTURES

Famous Explorers' Logs and Cameras to Feature Season's Event.

DR. GOULD ON PROGRAM

Thrilling chapters from the logs and cameras of famous present-day explorers, including the first movies of a waterspout from an airplane, stories and pictures of life far beneath the surface of the sea and the dangerous quest of a long-haired tiger, will feature the 1930-31 lecture series of the National Geographic Society, it was announced yesterday.

Dr. Laurence M. Gould, Byrd's second in command, opens the series Friday, November 14, at the Washington Auditorium with his illustrated lecture "With Byrd to the Bottom of the World." Dr. Gould will describe the arduous trek made afoot to within 300 miles of the South Pole. He and a few companions were the first men to set foot on American soil in the Antartic—Marie Byrd Land (named for Mrs. Byrd) previously discovered by Admiral Byrd from the air, and claimed by him for the United States.

Dr. Gould will tell of the finding of Amundsen's cache, placed eighteen years before at the foot of Axel Heiberg Glacier.

Capt. Stevens Listed.

A long distance aerial-photographic survey will be described by Capt. Albert W. Stevens when he recounts a 12,000-mile trip from Washington to Buenos Aires and across the Andes to Chile. In this lecture is a unique motion picture of the first waterspout ever filmed from an airplane. The survey party risked death to play tag with this tropical twister, and to record its sinuous turnings on motion picture film.

Admiral Byrd, William Beebe, Capt. "Bob" Bartlett, Maynard Owen Williams, Dr. Robert F. Griggs and Roy Chapman Andrews and others are scheduled to speak in the course of this winter's lecture series.

The list of lectures is as follows:

"With Byrd to the Bottom of the World," by Dr. Laurence M. Gould, November 14.

"The Depths of the Sea," by Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, November 21.

"My Quest of the Saiga Antelope and Long-Haired Tiger," by William J. Morden, November 28.

"Linking the Americas by Air," by Capt. Albert W. Stevens, December 5.

"Kashmir and the Taj Mahal," by Capt. John Noel, December 12.

"The Land of the Lost Eskimos," by Capt. Robert A. Bartlett, December 19.

Dr. Beebe to Lecture.

"Two Miles Down," by Dr. William Beebe, January 2.

"The New Turkey," by Maynard Owen Williams, January 9.

"Gigantic Brazil and its Glittering Capital," January 16. (Speaker to be announced later.)

"Sea Hawks," by Capt. C. W. R. Knight, January 23.

"Canoeing the Snake and Columbia Rivers," by Amos Burg, February 13.

"Rounding Cape Horn," by A. J. Villiers, February 20.

"Five Thousand Miles for a Liverwort," by Dr. Robert F. Griggs, February 27.

"Undersea Life in the South Seas," by Arthur C. Pillsbury, March 6.

"The Prehistoric Life of Gobi," by Roy Chapman Andrews, March 13.

Raw Cork Valued At $300,000 Burns

Fire, Followed by Blast, Sweeps Warehouse in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Raw cork valued at approximately $300,000 was destroyed today by fire which swept through a warehouse of the Crown Cork & Seal Co., and threatened buildings where highly inflammable material is stored.

The flames were halted after an hour by fire fighters and apparatus summoned from all sections of the city by eight alarms. Just as the fire was discovered, an explosion occurred. Flames then spread rapidly through the inflammable cork, which generated a withering heat.

P. E. Husting, vice president of the company, said the loss was covered by insurance and that the warehouse would be rebuilt immediately.

Free Text Books Crowd Space in Business High

Problems arising from the lack of storage space at the Business High School have been intensified by the free text book plan, and the resultant receipt of 5,000 additional books, thousands of reams of paper and other office supplies. All available storage space in the cellars and subcellars was some time ago appropriated for military drill, lunchrooms, kitchens, lockers and cloakrooms.

Following last Wednesday's school assembly, underclassmen were urged to assume the duties of citizenship in an address delivered to them by George J. Adams, president of the Junior Citizens' Alliance, and a graduate of Yale University. "Both school spirit and patriotism," he said, "demand from you an expression of your desire to serve for the common good."

Business Glee Clubs Rehearsing Operetta

The combined glee clubs of the school are busily rehearsing an operetta to be given during the latter part of the month. Geoffrey Morgan is the author of the play, which is named "The Count and the Co-Ed."

Robert Riley, Jesse Suter and Miss Selma Borchardt addressed student assemblies at Business High on November 4, when the national elections were discussed. Patriotism and citizenship were stressed.

Women Forming Dry Group in West Virginia

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Mrs. William Brewster, of Lewisburg, announced today that steps were taken at a meeting here yesterday to organize a West Virginia branch of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform. Mrs. Brewster, a member of the executive committee of the national organization, was named temporary State chairman.

She said the purpose of the State organization was "to organize West Virginia for the wet column."

Market Protests Are Overruled

Law Requires the Payment of License Fees, Coombs Says.

Protests of the operators of stands in Center Market were overruled yesterday by Wade H. Coombs, superintendent of licenses, who decided that the stand owners will have to pay the full $5 license fee for the next year.

The stand owners protested that it would be unjust to require them to pay the license fee in view of the fact that the Federal Government is threatening to demolish the market. Mr. Coombs ruled that the law left him no alternative but to require payment of the license fee.

Most business licenses expire this month and business concerns which fail to renew their licenses before December 1 are liable to arrest and fine. The license fees yield $170,000 a year, Mr. Coombs said. Licenses for vendors and hucksters are among those which do not expire this month. They run from April to April. Hacking licenses expire annually in July. Other licenses expire this month.

Hagerstown Guarding Against Scarlet Fever

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 8.—Drastic steps were taken today by Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer, to curb an epidemic of scarlet fever at the halfway school on the outskirts of this city. Approximately a score of children are ill with the disease, four of the cases being reported today.

Tests will be made of all students at the school, which has an enrollment of 235. The school will not be closed unless there is further spread of the disease. Two years ago a diptheria epidemic visited the same section.

NEW PLAN TO RULE TRIAL BOARD CASES

Every Complaint Preferred Will Be Investigated by Aid of Bride.

FAULTS ARE REMEDIED

Reorganization of the procedure incident to the filing and prosecution of complaints before trial boards of the Police and Fire Departments has been worked out by the heads of the departments, Commissioner Herbert B. Crosby and William W. Bride, corporation counsel.

Under the new plan, all complaints against policemen or firemen will be investigate by members of the staff of the corporation counsel who will make a formal report to Maj. Henry G. Pratt, superintendent of police, in the case of policemen, and to Fire Chief George S. Watson in the case of firemen.

Both Maj. Pratt and Chief Watson, however, will have the right to send members of their forces to trial on a charge even though the preliminary investigation indicates that conviction of the individual is not thought likely by the corporation counsel's office.

Present System Faulty.

The new procedure was worked out because of dissatisfaction with some of the results of the present system. Too often, police officials point out, citizens raise a hue and cry about treatment accorded them by one or another policeman and charges are preferred against the criticized individual. When the officer is brought before the trial board, however, his critic often refuses to testify against him and the man is acquitted. The acquittal, however, does not wipe out the first impression given the public by the original criticism, officials aver.

Under the new arrangement, John O'Day, of the staff of the corporation counsel, will investigate all complaints against either firemen or policemen. Complainants will be asked to make formal and full affidavits setting forth their criticism in detail.

Results of the investigation by Mr. O'Day will be studied by Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel, who will scan the evidence gathered and the law department regulations involved and report to Mr. Bride on the advisability of preferring formal charges.

Advantages Are Cited.

When it is recommended that formal charges be preferred this recommendation will be transmitted to Maj. Pratt or to Fire Chief Watson and Robert E. Lynch, assistant corporation counsel, will act as prosecutor before the trial boards. Not until after the thorough investigation outlined will formal charges be preferred against any individual.

The advantages of the new course, it is said, will be more thoroughly prepared cases and elimination of many cases which now come to naught before the Trial Board because of lack of prosecution testimony or of inadequate testimony.

In one recent case several persons involved in a complaint against a policeman were unable to identify the man when the case was heard by the Trial Board and the charges were, of course, dismissed.

WASHINGTON WASH

By STRICKLAND GILLILAN

NOW that the results are known, so far as elections and defeats are concerned, it would be well to take some dispassionate views of things, on their merits, if any. We have been bughouse and haywire as long as is good for us. Sanity is dusting off her throne in order to protect the rear of her knickers, and preparing to be seated once more.

Facts may now be presented without campaign bias or a suspicion of their being considered propaganda.

One of the foolishnesses on which we were all more or less sold was and is the unemployment problem. Mr. Hoover, himself, is partly responsible for the excitement along this line, for he has so accentuated it through his work in publicity, openly lending to its solution every aid in his power. This is not the first administration that ever had a panic, but it is the first one that ever did anything active and concerted and continued and official to relieve the victims of such panic as it encountered. Bert acted as if it were the first panic the world had ever known, and bless his heart he went at it as if his and our lives depended on his immediate solution of the problem and his removal of all unfavorable conditions. He would. Every new parent thinks his children are the first ones. This is Mr. Hoover's first panic as our President, so it is the first one he has felt the imperative need of ameliorating. He has abundered the responsibility for relief as if he were wholly responsible for the panic. He has not spared himself in the least. A key to this attitude of his is found in an answer he once made to a mutual friend who asked him:

After a long silence, he looked up and said:

"Feed all the hungry children in the world."

SWIFT & CO., I am privately told, had Whiting Williams (an authority on laboring people's conditions) make a survey of the present unemployment situation as compared with those that accompanied the Democratic panic of 1893 and the Republican one of 1907. The result of that survey was the discovery that in both the previous panics mentioned, there were more people unemployed than there are today and those unemployed were, on an average, less well fixed to stand the siege than the unemployed today are. There was no railroading, and sidings for empty cars was at a premium.

Did anybody know enough to sound that note during the recent campaign? I didn't hear it. The Republicans missed as many bets as one set of men could have missed in a given length of time. I even believe they established a record. I am one of the gang, but they saw to it that I had no opportunity to assist them in their mistakes. Those who watched them mistaking, saw that they needed no help.

Of course one doesn't want to appear in the role of panic-minimizer. There is no unemployment situation that isn't serious. One employable man who can get no employment is a serious situation. Lots of men are proportionately more serious. But there has been a tendency to treat this unemployment situation as if it were the first and worst the world has known, when everybody knows it isn't. History will show it. History shows a lot of things, after there have been a certain number of years of unjust martyrdom for innocent goats. Vox populi becomes vox Dei only after it has been vox Satani for a few years. Vox populi waits about as many years as a boy does, for the the voice change.

THE campaign that just ended developed one more superbuzzard —the author of "The Great Mistake." He signs his name Knox, and he does. It were well to pay one's respects to that diatribe tribe once and for all. It is wrong to call them buzzards, for buzzards are scavengers and leave a landscape cleaner after their loathsome meals. I apologize to the feathered variety. These fouler fowls leave the landscape infinitely worse. Too, the buzzard lifts himself and his fragrant load up into the azure and gets away from it all, once in a while. These human jackals stay right down with it; they are an earthbound type of carrion reveler. In only one respect they resemble a buzzard—they can scan a whole landscape of rose gardens and park and waving meadow, and never catch a whiff of new mown hay or flower perfume, though a mile-distant dead chipmunk's olfactory allurement will reach them instantly and start them drooling. To attract them, a stench is necessary. They can look over the life of a human outstanding for kindness and gentleness and desire to help other humans, and find a blemish to write a thick, nasty book about. It doesn't have to be a big blemish; it doesn't even have to be a real blemish —just the rumor of a blemish is enough. The hyenas who dug up the pitiful dust of the gentle, friend-martyred Hardings and defiled them before scattering them to the four winds, are fair samples of the ghoul-de-luze. And the slime-slinging defamer of our present President comes in the same category, though each should be ashamed of being in the class of the other. My vocabulary falls down in attempting to describe or characterize them. I know a lot of awful names that I once learned from an ox-driver who hauled logs out of a swamp, but there don't a skin-removing name in the lot, but that, if applied to one of these graveworms, would be a promotion. Ugh!

AT the Press Club recently, a visitor from the Big Town was severely criticizing the architecture and general appearance of this city that is rapidly approaching the stage at which it will be unquestionably the most beautiful in the world. He and a friend had driven about the Capital, finding one ugliness after another. They were both disgusted. Both were of great wealth, one possessed of an amazing taste in civic beauty.

My anaemic friend "Blah" (H. O. Bishop) sat and listened. On the surface he was calm. But his nose twitched now and then, always an indication that he is inwardly registering 212 Fahrenheit. At length he gently said:

"You, with your exquisite taste, and your wealthy friend—of course, you are engaged in some great enterprise of truly esthetic beautification somewhere?"

"No, indeed! I'm not a builder."

"What! Not even your friend and you who see what a botch this city is, are doing anything, anywhere, to perpetuate your better ideas as to public beauty?"

"No!"

"But there is opportunity—right out in the hills of Virginia, close to this botch of a town, is territory that would lend itself ideally to any superhuman plans. The landscape is virgin, with unlimited natural facilities, unspoiled. Maybe you'd like to take your friend out there and plan and build something real, before death takes you two out of the sphere of activity?"

"No. What do you think I am—an agent of some one?"

"I'll tell you," said Blah, leaning close and talking still more gently! "just what I think you are. In fact, I know it. You are just a plain bellyacher. You and your friend. This city is filled with decent people who are doing their dumb utmost to beautify the community. Of course they don't know things, as you and your friend do, but they are groping along and doing their poor best. How much better it would be if you two also did your best, which would be so vastly better than these poor blind moles are doing!"

Strange to say, by that time the critical visitor was madder than the wettest hen you ever saw.

The people who have so successfully, through a course of years, built up the machine for spreading and exaggerating the news of something wrong, the professional viewers-with-alarm, can take a rest now until the next campaign, except, of course, those who are doing so on salary. They have to live—have to, but why?

* * * *

WE have heard of nothing else that so arouses our sincere admiration as the unfiltered gall of American manufacturers who speak of the wonderful standard of living among the laboring classes of this country, who spout eloquently about the dignity of American labor; who maintain that the best is none too good for the American workman; then sneak off to Europe to make their goods with the help of foreign labor and ship them into the country to compete with American-made goods, thus putting these highly-honored and pedestaled American laborers out of their jobs.

As if that alone were not enough to arouse our stupefied, goggle-eyed adulation, they gild the lily and paint the rainbow by coming here now in a body to try to lower the tariff so that they can make a still bigger profit on their foreign-manufactured American labor robbing goods.

They make one think of the fellow who went into a New York restaurant, sat in one of the restaurant's chairs, accepted the restaurant's napkin from a waiter, drank the restaurant's free ice water, then pulled out his own home-made sandwich and began eating it. Before the waiter could get breath enough to protest, the "customer" looked up and asked querulously?

NEW DRIVE PLANNED TO HALT RUM FLOW

LUHRING TO BEGIN WORK

Launching a new drive to properly enforce the national prohibition act was seen yesterday when United States Attorney Leo A. Rover announced that due to the rapid progres made in the disposal of criminal cases during the present term of District Supreme Court, Justice Oscar R. Luhring would cease to sit as judge in Criminal Division No. 3 on January 1 and would devote his time to consideration of 50 padlock cases which are pending.

At the same time it was stated that Justice Luhring will hold a preliminary call of padlock cases on November 14 and at that time will fix definite dates for hearings.

The announcement came coincidentally with the release by Mr. Rover of figures showing the work done by his office since the fall term of the court began. The figures, compiled by Chief Clerk Milford F. Schwartz, of Mr. Rover's staff, reveals that for the first time in ten years the criminal docket is almost up to date.

New System Held Effective.

According to Mr. Schwartz's report, 285 cases were disposed of in the month ended yesterday. Only 218 indictments were returned during the period, which gives the prosecutor's office a net gain of 85 cases. The report also revealed that only 384 cases now pending, as compared to 329 a month ago. It also disclosed that all the cases except 46 are less than a month old.

The report follows Mr. Rover's recent announcement that all cases sent to the grand jury from Police Court will be considered the following week, if possible. The new system has been operative only a week, but is said to be very effective.

Mr. Rover viewed the report as very encouraging, pointing out that while Federal courts all over the country are reporting congestion, the local court is practically jam-up.

Disposition of Cases.

The report of the prosecutor takes into consideration the fact that the Baker murder case occupied Justice Jesse C. Adkins for ten days, and that Justice Jennings Bailey has been occupied with the packers consent decree hearing for a month and probably will be so occupied for a month longer. Justice Bailey is regularly assigned to the equity divisions of the court, and ordinarily would be hearing some of the padlock cases except for absorption in the other matter.

According to Mr. Rover's report Justices Adkins, Luhring and Peyton Gordon during the last month disposed of the 283 cases as follows: Pleas of guilty, 179; convictions, 36; directed verdicts, 10; acquittals, 12; disagreements 2, and nolle prosequis, 44.

Trio Sent to Jail On Liquor Charge

Two Must Serve 6 Months, Third Gets 70 Days, in Lieu of Fines.

Convicted of possessing liquor in violation of the national prohibition act, three young men were sent to jail yesterday in default of fines. Sentence was imposed by Judge Gus A. Schuldt.

Joseph Lee Gray, 20 years old, and Charles G. Parnell, 21, were sentenced to pay fines of $500 or serve six months. James Albert White, 22 years old, was ordered to serve 70 days in lieu of a $300 fine. All were convicted last week after a jury had taken a view of the premises.

Testimony was that no liquor could be found in the apartment where the men were arrested on N street northwest near Twenty-second street, but that a large quantity was discovered in a vacant apartment connected with the other by a trapdoor. Assistant United States Attorney Julian I. Richards appeared for the Government.

Charles Town Man Dies.

12TH ANNIVERSARY OF ARMISTICE SEES PEACE THREATENED

More Men Under Arms Now Than Ever Before in Peace Times.

SEVERAL SORE SPOTS IN EUROPE AND ASIA

League of Nations Depicted as Sitting on Lid While World Awaits Action.

By CHARLES HODGES
(Associate Professor of Politics at New York University).

Twelve years after!

A bigger armament bill than at any time in a generation of the peace of preparedness which culminated in 1914 with unprecedented conflict on a world scale.

Kipling's "little wars of empire" being waged on the battle front of imperialism which stretches from Africa into the Near East and through Asia to the Pacific Ocean itself; Italian pacification in the Libyan hinterland, Turkish subjugation of the Kurds, Anglo-India suppression of Afghan raiders, Chinese-Soviet trouble in Manchuria, Japanese quelling uprising in Formosa.

Alien control unwelcome from the Caribbean to east of Suez—Haiti, Panama, Morocco, Egypt, India, French Indo-China.

Civil war, rampant in China for the better part of two decades, still a threat to the unification of the Celestial Republic.

One-third of Europe under dictatorships, unrest within these nations, none too secure under the Paris settlement, possibly detonating outside in Old World neighborhoods with disastrous results.

The sore spots of the peace treaties, from reparations, demilitarization and the Polish Corridor on the Baltic to the interdicted union of Austria with Germany, Hungary's empty throne and trisected Macedonia on the Aegean Sea.

Other Danger Spots.

Other danger spots of European rivalry—especially those marking the Franco-Italian duel over the Mediterranean power, such as the Albanian door to the Balkans, friction over Tunis and numerous lesser pin-pricks on Mars.

Twelve years after—

The League of Nations sitting on the lid, while the world at large each twelve months seems amazed that Geneva does not make more rapid progress toward disarmament.

Over half a dozen meetings of the preparatory commission for the disarmament conference to pave the way for the show-down as many statesmen fear—the latest in session to clear up fifteen remaining "major points," which delay the submission of a draft convention to a world parley, as this twelfth anniversary of the Armistice rolls by.

Yet a world parley on arms demanded by every league assembly since 1925, with greater and greater impatience voiced at the obstacles encountered repeatedly in the preliminary gatherings.

Within the midst of these alarms and incursions, the League of Nations has brought all Geneva's paraphenalia of scientific statesmanship to bear upon the world's foremost question—the limitation of armaments.

This business of feeling the pulse of militarism is by no means an easy task.

When President Hoover stresses that there are today over 50,000,000 men under arms, though he includes trained reserves, as contrasted with 30,000,000 before the great war, one side only of the picture is presented. This means that about one-fifth of the total actually are with the colors—or in the neighborhood of 6,000,000 for the active forces, plus some 22,000,000 of former service men, organized for mobilization in case hostilities break out.

Cockpit of Militarism.

Europe is the cockpit of militarism. The Old World's active armies account for 58 per cent of the total military forces with the colors today. Asia, chiefly due to Chinese militarism more dangerous to themselves than others, has 33 per cent. The New World, notwithstanding the supremacy of the United States has but 7 per cent. Africa boasts of less than 2 per cent. Oceania, including the Australian Commonwealth and the Dominion of New Zealand, accounts for one-tenth of 1 per cent!

Now when we added to the normal peace strength the all-important reserves ready for immediate call, the consequences of what can be called the "European military system" become apparent. Thanks to compulsory service, which under conscription makes big armies cheap for even impoverished nations, the Old World has 80 per cent of the organized forces of the earth at its command; Asia drops to 13 per cent, the Americas to 6, Africa to less than 1 and Oceania trails with two-tenths of 1 per cent.

This is why European militarism presents a baffling paradox.

Though the armies immediately available for defense actually are smaller than before the war, there are more states now in the Old World—and their military machines are built on conscription systems with these reserves of man-power which enable them to expand to three or four times their peace strength overnight.

France, Russia Dominate.

France in the west and Soviet Russia in the east now dominate the military situation. Nevertheless, France, upon whom the mantle of continental militarism has fallen thanks to her fear over security, has reduced her forces with the colors about one-third since the armistice so that they are 35 per cent below prewar strength; but the 833,000 under arms have back of them about 5,400,000 reservists.

Likewise, Communist Russia has cut the czarist military forces in half; but the 562,000 rank and file can be expanded, provided the Soviet has built up effective equipment, to more than 6,000,000 men. Even Fascist Italy, thundering against all comers, has made only a relatively small increase in her peace strength—now

Two Warwicks Chosen To Seats in Congress

Boss Shannon of Kansas City and Boss Crump of of Memphis, After Making Many Representatives, Decide to Serve U. S. Themselves—Both Able.

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

Two political bosses of the old school were elected to the House of Representatives in Tuesday's hectic election—Joe Shannon, of Kansas City, Mo., and Ed Crump, of Memphis, Tenn. Both are Democrats, and both are picturesque.

Up until this year, the two men had been content to remain in the background; to send other men to Congress. Now they have decided to become statesmen themselves.

In the case of Boss Shannon, the transition caused something of a sensation. Had anybody predicted such a thing five years ago, Shannon's cronies would have scoffed and laughed. Joe Shannon in Congress! Why Joe Shannon had never made a speech in his life.

The change in the Kansas City boss began about two years ago when he was named to a convention to revise the State constitution. To prepare himself, he set out to read up on constitutions, and among the tomes that came before him was a "Life of Thomas Jefferson." With his reading of this, they say, came the metamorphosis—the transformation of Joe Shannon from a boss into a statesman. He discovered that he and Jefferson had many things in common: that on many things they saw eye to eye.

And the next thing that people knew, Joe Shannon was out making speeches. His old political friends looked on aghast. Was this the Joe Shannon who had always left the speechmaking to others, while he got out the vote; was this the Joe Shannon who had dreaded the platform and worked quietly on the fringes of the crowd? It was hard to believe.

Now these friends are saying that the real reason Shannon decided to run for office was so that he could get up in the House of Representatives and make a speech.

Those in Washington who know Shannon, however, say that he will be a valuable man to his party when he gets in the House. Like most men of his type, he is possessed of a lot of charm. Also he is shrewd. And when it comes to spreading poison about the opposition, they say that he is without a peer.

Ed Crump, the Democratic boss of Memphis, has been even more powerful than Shannon. The latter has had to share control with another—the celebrated Jim Pendergast. Why, nobody seems to know, but the Shannon Democrats are called "rabbits," and the Pendergast Democrats are called "goats."

But there is no such division in Crump's bailiwick. Crump rules alone. You have to see Crump and Crump alone when you want anything in Memphis. It is Crump who decides who is to have this or that State office, and it is Crump who decides who will represent the district in Congress.

When Hubert F. Fisher, the man who now represents the Memphis District in the House, heard that there was talk of Crump himself coming here, he hastened to inform the boss that he would be glad to step aside.

Crump is tall, red-headed and dynamic. It is said of him that he has been successful in everything he has turned his hand to. Unlike Shannon, he has no passion for oratory. Nevertheless, he does not hesitate to say something when there is something to be said.

He is the kind of man, his friends say, who might be expected to jump up in the House some day and interrupt a Republican spell-binder by simply uttering one word—"Bunk."

Like Vice President Curtis, Boss Crump's hobby is thoroughbred horses. Consequently, he should be a familiar figure at Laurel and Bowie when the season is on.

One of the greatest stallions in the country, by the way, bears the name of Ed Crump. He is owned by Mrs. Katherine Hitt, and is now in stud at her Virginia farm. Among his offspring are "Hot Toddy" and several other crack thoroughbreds in the Hitt Stable.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

By the 97th Senator.

Wednesday.

THE people have spoken. They have registered their will at the polls with their usual unerring discrimination. I never had any serious doubt about the result. I felt sure I would be reelected, but I had no idea that the voters in my State would turn out for me in such large numbers. Realizing that these words from "A Senator's Diary" are to be published within a few days, I want to use this opportunity to thank all my friends who stood loyally by me and worked so energetically to keep me in the Senate.

I had not intended to stand for reelection. At great personal sacrifice I have been serving the public for many years and I felt I was entitled to a well-earned vacation. Moreover, in performing my duties as a public servant I have neglected to provide adequately for the future of my family and I contemplated embarking upon the "lame-duck" lobbying profession, which I understand offers unusual money-making opportunities to impecunious statesmen. Many of my erstwhile colleagues are engaged in it and I am told it is not unusual for them to build up an income ten times that of a senator.

But my personal wishes had to be disregarded. Once again I was compelled to sacrifice my own interests and the welfare of my family for the good of the country and my party. The demand among my constituents that I offer myself again on the altar of patriotism became irresistible. It was represented to me that the party was faced with certain defeat unless I lent my name and prestige to the ticket. To the pleading of my devoted followers who had supported me through thick and thin in the battles of the past I could not turn a deaf ear. I yielded to the draft and consented to accept another nomination.

I did little campaigning in my State. I made a few speeches on the stump and only three radio addresses. I spent no money—except a few paltry thousands sent to me by George Moses. I placed my political fate in the hands of my friends and their response justified my confidence.

My opponent conducted a campaign of villification, abuse and misrepresentation. Throughout the campaign I followed the policy of ignoring his attacks and letting the people judge my fitness by my record in office. Through my publicity bureau I modestly pointed out that I had obtained for them more new post-office buildings, more rivers and harbor appropriations, more new irrigation and reclamation projects, more money to fight hog cholera and boll weevil and the corn borer, and more relief for the farmer, the World War veteran and the taxpayer than all my predecessors combined. Taking advantage of my franking privilege as a senator, I was able to mail documents setting forth my achievements to all my constituents at a remarkably small cost—to myself. I saw to it that Gerald Nye's committee never had any ground for going into my expense accounts.

The opposition, on the other hand, literally dumped barrels of money into the campaign to defeat me. They flouted the Newberry resolution right and left. Some of my friends were so indignant over the "goodling" that went on against me that they asked me to file charges with the Nye committee. But now that I am elected I see no necessity for it.

I realize, of course, that it is only a step from the Senate to the presidency. Most of my colleagues, especially those who have just been reelected, look upon themselves as presidential timber. My only worry now is that some of my friends will start a presidential boom for me. I disclaim all such ambition, but, of course, no one can turn down the presidency—if it is offered to him.

A NATIONAL CHAIRMAN'S life is not a happy one. He has a thankless job. He is, in fact, a "goat." Whatever he does seems to be wrong. If his party loses an election, the tendency is to blame the loss on him. If his party wins, they say that he is a dub anyhow and that it won in spite of him.

Those who think that a national chairman's life is all skittles and beer should ask John Raskob about it. And if his testimony isn't convincing, I suggest calling as witnesses Simeon Fess, Dr. Work, William M. Butler, Claudius Huston, Clem Shaver or Will Hays, just to mention a few who can speak with authority on the subject. All of them have had experience as national chairmen and most of it has been unpleasant.

Poor Raskob! With a $100,000,000 or so tucked away in the safe, I don't see why he goes out hunting for trouble. But Al Smith coaxed him into accepting the chairmanship of the Democratic national committee and now that he is in it he doesn't want to get out, at least not as long as they keep trying to throw him out. He is a proud and stubborn man who hates to quit.

He has been the most generous "angel" the Democrats have had since the days of August Belmont and Thomas Fortune Ryan. Financially, he has put the Democratic party back on its feet. Yet no sooner had the Democratic party gone down to defeat in the 1928 election than loud cries went up, particularly from the South, for his immediate resignation. And those cries are still going up.

Throughout the past campaign Raskob has been repeatedly charged by Republican orators with "bearing" the market and spreading distress throughout the land in order to discredit President Hoover. To counteract the effect of these allegations, Raskob "went on the air" a few days before the election and made an address which concluded with these words:

"No country in the world, not even our own, was ever in such a splendid position to go forward and enjoy a period of prosperity as our country is today. Everything is thoroughly defiated and business is now turning upward. The momentum is necessarily slow at first, but within three months, with the impetus the automobile industry is

OHIO CONTRIBUTES FOUR DISASTERS IN PAST HALF DECADE

Buckeye State Oftener on Front Page fo Such News Than Any Other.

MINE CATASTROPHE IS LATEST ON LIST

Tragic End of Shenandoah Occurred There, as Did Hospital Blast.

The State of Ohio, home of Presidents and scene of many bitter political struggles, has apparently become a magnet for major catastrophes within the past few years.

With the death of 79 in the Sunday Creek Coal Co. mine at Millfield, Ohio, last week, the Buckeye State's score of national disasters within the last five years mounted to four, more than any other State in the Union has experienced in a quarter of a century.

While the death toll in no instance has approached the staggering losses left in the wake of hurricanes such as that which two months ago swept Santo Domingo, both the nature and the far-reaching effects of the Ohio calamities have been front page news for days in succession.

To the fifteen catastrophes of a national aspect in this country since 1920, Ohio has contributed four as well as several minor accidents that took a long list of lives.

While this Midwestern State had nothing to do with it, the Shenandoah, pride of the United States Navy, selected an Ohio plain to wreck itself on in 1925 during a storm and thereby started the State on its hard-luck career that now threatens to overshadow its contribution to politics and education.

Eyes Focused on State.

Though only fourteen were killed in this air disaster, the inquiries that followed kept the spotlight focused on the Buckeye State for many weeks thereafter. And now with every dirigible or airship accident of any great consequence the event is again recorded that the Shenandoah was wrecked near Ava, Ohio, on September 3, 1925.

Four years later, on May 15, 1929, the continent was stunned at the first news of probably the greatest hospital accident of modern times. A blast and fire in the X-ray room of the Cleveland Clinic took a toll of 124 lives, seriously injured more than 100 others, and did much property damage.

Ironically enough, the hospital was the pride of the city and the State and was equipped with the most advanced instruments of science and laboratories.

Besides the horror of the burning to death of helpless patients, there was the loss of numerous physicians and surgeons distinguished in their profession. Again inquiries followed and so kept the holocaust before the public eye for weeks.

Hardly a year later the country was again shocked as the flash went around the world that more than 300 convicts in the State Penitentiary at Columbus were killed while trapped in a raging inferno. This was on April 21, 1930. The toll finally reached 320 dead and 228 injured.

It was believed that the prisoners had started the fire in an attempt to escape, but the warden and guards were blamed for keeping the frantic men in their cells as the blaze swept the prison.

Again on Front Page.

This time the spotlight of inquiry arising from public indignation was more severe and penetrating than at any time before or since. And for the third time Ohio was on the front pages for more than a week.

The most recent disaster, which occurred last Wednesday, was the worst in the history of mining in the Middle West. Gas explosions and fire killed 79 and injured 20, more, and for a time it was thought that the death toll would reach 150.

Now the inquiries are on once more and State officials are trying to explain why misfortune should again strike Ohio.

One could list numerous accidents that broke onto the front pages for a day during the last few years. Within three weeks, for instance, in the early part of this year, four bus crashes caused the loss of 20 lives and the injury of 30 persons. In one of these nine school children and a driver died.

Floods have frequently taken toll of life and property along the southern boundary of Ohio when the river of the same name went on one of its not unusual rampages. In 1913 732 were killed in the State and its neighbor, Indiana.

The low rolling plains have also made the State prey to frequent windstorms that have left death and wreckage in their wake.

One could also go back as far as 1906 when 172 school children and two teachers died in the Cullinwood School fire. But that would be superfluous.

Briefly, the other major catastrophes in the United States during the last decade are: (1920) the Wall street explosion, which killed 30; (1921) Arkansas River floods, 1,500 dead and missing; (1922) Knickerbocker Theater roof cave-in, 98 dead; (1924) Nixon, N. J., nitration plant blast, 20 killed; (1925) storm in Missouri and southern Illinois, 830 dead, and partial destruction of Santa Barbara, Calif.; (1926) lightning struck munitions reservation at Lake Denmark, N. J., 21 dead, and a tropical hurricane, which swept Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi, killing 372 (1927) Mississippi floods that did untold damage and took several hundred lives, and New England floods that killed 120; (1928) Florida hurricane, more than 1,500 dead.

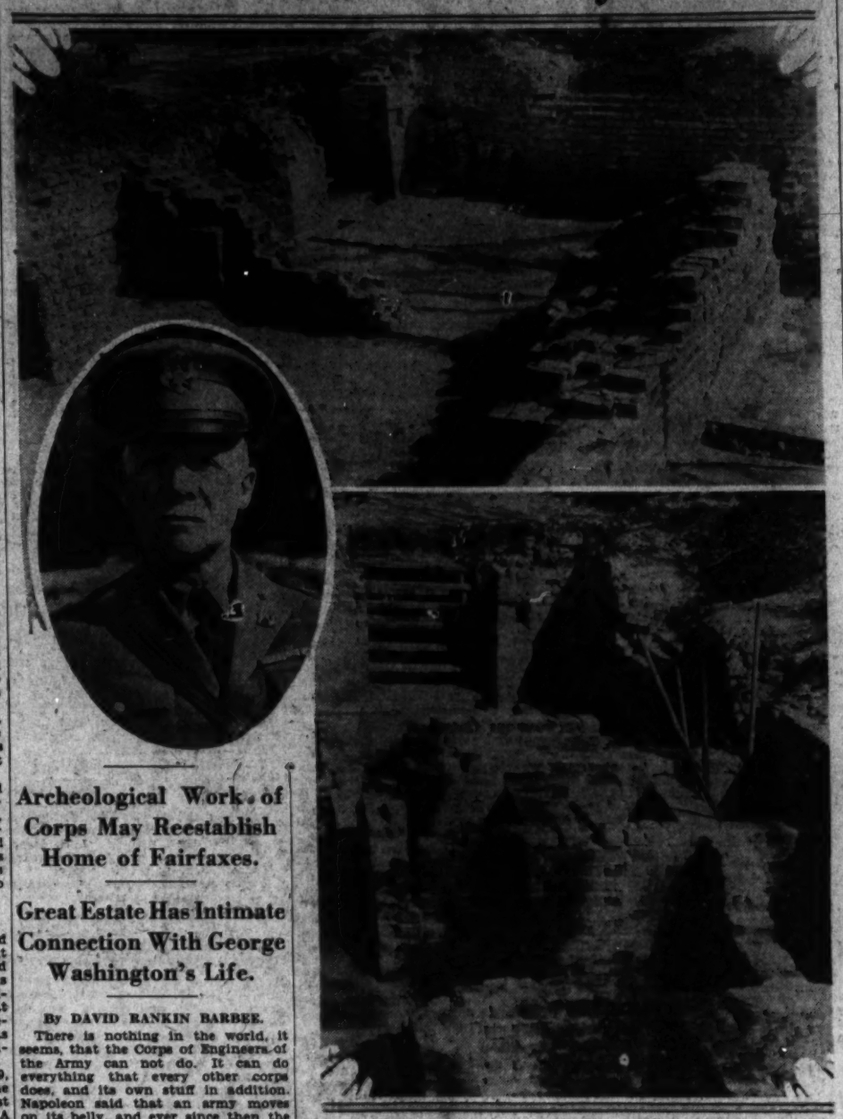
Engineers of Fort Humphreys Uncover Ruins of Belvoir



Archeological Work of Corps May Reestablish Home of Fairfaxes.

Great Estate Has Intimate Connection With George Washington's Life.

By DAVID RANKIN BARBEE.

There is nothing in the world, it seems, that the Corps of Engineers of the Army can not do. It can do everything that every other corps does, and its own stuff in addition. Napoleon said that an army moves on its belly, and ever since then the Quartermaster Corps has been high hatting every other corps, as much as to say, "Without us you could not travel, nor fight, nor, win battles, nor even sleep." But if you read the stories of battles at all closely you have taken note that when the Quartermaster Corps breaks down, the Army moves on on an empty stomach; but when the Corps of Engineers breaks down, all the Army can do is to turn back or push in and swim for it.

This is not to be a homily on the Corps of Engineers, however, for most of my friends are in the Quartermaster Corps, and I can not quarrel with my bacon. They are all good soldiers, but none of them so versatile as the engineers. That, you know, is the double cream of the Army, picked from the lads who graduate at the head of their class, and then keep on studying. Their work keeps them at their books, and when they tire of their books they look about for some new outlet for their energy.

Archeology Taken Up.

Down at Fort Humphreys, on the Potomac, the engineers school has developed a new phase of its versatility. Under the leadership of their old hard-bitten, highly intelligent commanding officer, Col. Edward M. Schulz, they have taken up archeology as a study, and as a corollary to that some of the junior officers have gone in enthusiastically for historical research, the most fascinating work that any intelligent person can turn his mind to. Their enthusiasm has spread beyond the immediate confines of their reservation to other branches of the Government, and in a few weeks it will be agitating Congress, which by that time will have recovered from the battle of last Tuesday. And before any of us know it, the American Institute of Architects will be bitten by this bug and then there will be no stopping the contagion. It is like a prairie fire, which has a small beginning, and pretty soon is raising hades everywhere.

Fort Humphreys, as you should know, is located on the site of one of the oldest Washington homesteads on the upper Potomac. It was known in Colonial times and long after Yorktown as Belvoir (beautiful to see), the estate of one branch of the Fairfax family, that branch into which the Washingtons married, and which has lingered with us to this good day, producing men and women of beauty and culture and refinement, and some of them, like Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway, captains of industry in this America of ours.

The manor house of Belvoir was destroyed by fire during the War of the Revolution, and since then the ruins have fallen into decay, being covered with the autumn leaf and the ivy, moldering to dust, and hidden by an impenetrable mass of trees and shrubbery that grew up from the very walls themselves.

Excavates Belvoir Foundations.

A year ago, when Col. Schulz went to Fort Humphreys as commandant of the engineering school, he heard of those ruins and also patches of the story of Belvoir, now more of a mythology than a historic reality. His interest was at once secured to a plan of uncovering those ruins to see what he could find, and for a year now he and some of his junior officers, employing the prisoners of the reservation and others, have been engaged in excavating the ancient foundations of Belvoir. It is archeological work of the first order, and their efforts have been rewarded by locating and laying bare the foundation walls of the manor house, of its outhouses and of the garden fence.

As their work proceeded they began to recover from ancient records the history of Belvoir, and now they have fired Representative R. Walton Moore and Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant 3d and others with their zeal, to the end that Congress will be asked to make an appropriation to rebuild Belvoir as it was in colonial days, to be used either as a museum or as the home

WILBUR RADIO TALK CITES CHILD'S NEEDS

HELD HUMAN RESOURCES

(Associated Press.)

Conservation of the Nation's children as "human resources" was urged last night by Secretary Wilbur in a radio address calling attention to President Hoover's child health conference November 19 to 22.

Speaking over the Columbia broadcasting chain, Mr. Wilbur, chairman of the conference, reviewed drives by previous administrations for conservation of natural resources—forest, rivers, land, minerals, fuel supply.

"Now another president, after a lapse of 20 years, uses again that word — conservation," Mr. Wilbur said. "President Hoover gives to the word a dual meaning—protection and wise use, applied not only to our natural resources, but to our human resources and vitality."

Children's Diseases Cited.

Wilbur said that of the 45,000,000 children in the United States, 1,000,000 have communicable diseases with a large annual death rate—to a large extent preventable; 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 are suffering from handicaps, deafness, blindness, crippling or mental deficiencies, much of which might be ameliorated; 18,000 die from accidents—"of course preventable;" and 200,000 pass annually under judgment of courts.

"There exists in this country, if brought to light and applied, sufficient knowledge and intelligence to wipe out, let us say, at least three-fourths of these ills," he continued.

He described the coming conference, with its 1,200 experts, as assembling "practically all we know about children from all angles" to be "sifted, sorted and given back to those who have the practical, everyday dealing with children."

Living Space Contracted.

Changing national ways have cramped children, the secretary said.

"We've contracted our living space—from prairies and plains and plantations and farms to city lots with bandbox houses, and squeezed from bandbox houses to pillbox apartments, whereas children need space," he pointed out.

"Home-made entertainment, the spelling bee and church social, candy pulls, charades, hayrides—all the things most of us grew up with—homely, unsophisticated, if you will, but calling something out of ourselves—initiative, give and take—have given way to the ready-made, the movie and the motor, yes, and the radio. And that's doing something to children."

ALLEGED CRUELTIES BY POLES PROTESTED

Ukrainian Council Adopts Resolution Addressed to League.

ENVOY DENIES ABUSES

Vienna, Austria, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The United National Ukrainian Associations at a meeting today adopted a resolution addressed to the League of Nations and the International Red Cross, protesting against alleged acts of terrorism by Polish forces in eastern Galicia.

The resolution asserts that thousands of Ukrainians were credibly reported to be dying lingering deaths or suffering from lashings inflicted by Polish lancers and foot soldiers carrying on a campaign of repression. In some cases, the resolution said, blows up to 500 had been inflicted on peasants who had long fainted from pain.

Within the past few weeks, the resolution alleged, homes had been razed in 700 villages in the districts of Arnopol, Buczacz, Sokol, Podhajce, Horody, Slawyczi and Gaje in eastern Galicia. Peasants were reported to be begging by the roadsides.

The repression, it was said, was due to Polish allegations that Ukrainian and Ruthenian peasants were unruly and sometimes had set fire to the property of Poles in their villages.

Tytus Filipowicz, Polish Ambassador to the United States, on arriving in New York from Poland last month, denied reports that Polish raiders were scourging east Galicia. He also denied that Polish armed forces looted, flogged and taxed peasants to prevent any attempt to gain independence.

HITLER BEER CELLAR SCENE OF MOURNING FOR REPUBLIC TODAY

Munich Rite Will Lament Twelfth Anniversary of Kaiser's Downfall.

CITY HALL IN COBURG IN DRAPING OF BLACK

Bavaria Forbids March of Brown Shirts or Any Cemetery Visit.

Munich, Germany, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—In the same "citizens beer cellar," where Adolph Hitler hatched his abortive plans for an overthrow of the government in 1923, the National Socialists will gather tomorrow in mourning services to commemorate the twelfth anniversary of the German revolution which established the republic.

Originally it was planned for a band of "brown shirts" to march through the city, as Hitler had hoped to march with Ludendorff seven years ago, and to hold services at the cemetery where lie those who fell in the revolution of 1918. But the police forbade such a demonstration and the Hitler followers turned to the storied old beer cellar.

Coburg Officially Mourns.

Advertisements of tomorrow's meeting have not indicated whether Hitler himself is to speak, mentioning only Alfred Wagner, a member of the Bavarian Diet, as the day's orator. The notices make it plain, however, that Jews will not be allowed to participate in the exercises. This is in accord with the anti-Semitic sentiments of the Fascists.

At Coburg, in Bavaria, the National Socialists who control the municipal government have determined to go the Hitlerites in Munich one better, and plan to drape the city hall in deep mourning with the monarchical and Bavarian colors flying side by side.

In Berlin, however, not even radio broadcast programs include any services which would remind republican Germany of one of the most profound changes in the nation's history. So far as the capital is concerned tomorrow will bring nothing unusual to a typical German Sunday.

Called "Day of Disgrace."

The newspaper Acht Uhr Abendblatt today carried an article by Philip Scheidemann, Reichstag Socialist who in 1918, proclaimed the republic from the steps of the Reichstag, in which appeared the assertion: "Had not the democratic republic been proclaimed in 1918, the Spartacists on that day of Germany's breakdown would have made our nation a branch of Soviet Russia. It would have been easy for them, for the Spartacists had arms in plenty while the Social Democrats had only umbrellas. Fortunately for the nation, the Spartacists were content merely to brandish their weapons and deliver speeches."

$150,000 of Leguia's Gems Found in Peru

Lima, Peru, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—A diamond collar purchased from one of the most famous jewelers in Paris for $150,000 has been found in a safe deposit box held by former President Augusto B. Leguia, the Court of Sanctions disclosed today.

The discovery was made in connection with the trial of the president's son, Juan Leguia, who was imprisoned with his father under charges of irregularities in the disbursement of treasury funds during the Leguia administration. The collar, it was said, is now in the possession of an Italian bank as a guarantee for credit in the son's favor.

Willed Most of $2,000,000 Estate of Candy Man in Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The will of Martin Dawson, pioneer Chicago candy manufacturer, in which he bequeaths most of an estate valued at $2,000,000 to the Catholic Church, was filed here today in the probate court. Under terms of the will, Mr. Dawson bequeathed $300,000 to Cardinal Mundelein for the purpose of erecting a church building, to be known as "The Little Flower," in memory of his mother and father, and $348,000 personally and as pastor to the Rev. Edward J. Mullaly, of St. Mary's Church. After a number of bequests to friends, Mr. Dawson bequeathed the residuary estate to Cardinal Mundelein for the church.

Other bequests included Mrs. Elisabeth N. Fox, of Detroit, $5,000, and $2,000 each to James Critchard and Frank Poynton, of Baltimore, Md.

Old Music Found For U. S. Anthem

Discovery Reveals Tune of "Star-Spangled Banner" Was American.

Fac-simile copies of the recently discovered American music to "The Star-Spangled Banner" have been distributed to a number of newspapers and about 100 distinguished Americans, among them President Hoover and former President Coolidge.

The discovery reveals that not only were the words to the anthem of American origin but that there was also an original American tune. James Hewitt was the composer, and the song was first sung by Mr. Darley and Mr. Nicholls in New York.

The original copy is now in the possession of Clinton A. Strong and Charles J. Nagy, of Philadelphia. Descendents of the composer also live in the Quaker City, where the manuscript was found.

NEWS OF LATEST HAPPENINGS IN MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA

CAPITAL TRIO HURT WHEN CARS COLLIDE

Mrs. Rosafy, Daughter and Grandson Are Injured on Fairfax Road.

CHAMBER MEETING SET

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 243. Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 2324-W-2.

A triple auto crash on the Fairfax road near Annandale, Va., yesterday resulted in serious injuries to two Washington women, who were brought to the Alexandria Hospital. The 6-year-old child of one of the women was also slightly hurt.

The women were Mrs. Louise Rosafsy, of 5124 Nebraska avenue northwest, and her daughter, Mrs. William Nicholson, of 2652 Woodley road. Mrs. Rosafy received broken legs and numerous cuts and bruises in the crash, which occurred when the women's car was in a head-on collision with a truck. Mrs. Nicholson's injuries were diagnosed as lacerations of the face, bruises about the body. Billy Nicholson, the child, was bruised and cut, but not badly hurt.

Mrs. Rosafy told Deputy Sheriff Henry Magarity of Fairfax County that she was attempting to pass another car when the collision occurred. The truck was owned by the Alexandria Hay & Grain Co., and driven by Leonard Wilson, of Alexandria, who escaped injury.

The impact of the Rosafy car caused the truck to swerve across the road and strike another car, belonging to George W. Lesher, of Freedmont, Ohio. The Lesher car ran off the road and overturned, but neither Lesher nor his wife, who was also in the car, was hurt. The front of the truck was badly damaged, and the Rosafy car demolished.

Mrs. Rosafy, her daughter and her grandchild had just left Washington en route to Omaha when the crash occurred.

The Fairfax County Chamber of Commerce will hold its regular monthly meeting Tuesday evening in the auditorium of the Annandale School at the junction of the Columbia pike and the Little River turnpike. Arrangements will be made for a banquet and rally later in the month.

The new section of the Washington-Richmond highway between Hyde Valley and Little Hunting Creek is now open to traffic. The new roadbed was constructed west of the old right of way and the village of Gum Springs and is about three-fourths of a mile in length. The new road was built under direction of the State Highway Department so as to eliminate the dangerous curve at Gum Springs and several other bad curves on the old roadway. The section south of the new bridge over Little Hunting Creek will be open to traffic about the end of the month and the southbound traffic to Mount Vernon is advised to use the old road until that time.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Fairfax Volunteer Fire Department will give a turkey dinner Thursday evening in the Sunday school rooms of the Southern Methodist Church at Fairfax. Mrs. Elton R. Holbrook has been appointed chairman of arrangements.

Tuesday morning she will be at the Lee-Jackson School to assist the club in the making of their year books, that afternoon she will visit the meeting of the Home Demonstration Club at Floris. Thursday afternoon she will assist in preparing the year books with the members of the 4-H Clubs at Burke. Friday morning she will work with the 4-H Club at Lorton and Fort Humphreys.

Wednesday Miss Thomas will attend the meeting of the county advisory board which meets at the home of Mrs. A. Harmond Roberts, near Accotink. She will at this time demonstrate the making of Christmas gifts. Friday afternoon the 4-H Clubs at Potters Hill, Woodlawn and Lee Jackson will hold their meetings.

The second annual hunt of the Fairfax Hunt Club was opened yesterday at Sunset Hills, Va., with a large field of riders. Many prominent Washingtonians participated. A long and exciting chase was enjoyed yesterday but sportsmen were disappointed when the fox hid in a rock bluff on Colvin Run. More than 40 persons took part in the chase.

The club has converted an old summer hotel into a modern clubhouse with all conveniences for the members. Several other hunts are planned for the coming season. More than 50,000 acres of land are under contract for hunting by the club, which gives it more territory than any other club in Virginia.

FEW DETOURS MAR TRAVEL IN VIRGINIA

Scattered Soft Places Due to Rains Reported by Highway Office.

THROUGH ROUTES LISTED

Richmond, Va., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Several detours in the State highway system are eliminated by construction forces during the past week, the weekly report of the Highway Department shows. With the exception of scattered soft and slippery places in the dirt sections, caused by recent rains, the road were said to be in good condition.

On United States Route 1, from Washington through Fredericksburg, Richmond and Petersburg to the North Carolina line, there were no detours and only limited construction just north of Fredericksburg, where a bridge was being widend, and at Richmond, where the road will be widened. Traffic was using the regular road in both places and was cautioned to drive slowly for the safety of workmen and their equipment.

Through the Shenandoah Valley, on Route 11, between Winchester and Staunton, there were three short sections of reconstruction where the road was being widened, but no detours were necessary and traffic was having no trouble going over the work. Between Staunton and Roanoke the only work underway was oiling just north of Roanoke. Traffic was going over this work, or using an alternate route over the Hoiling road.

Roanoke to Bristol.

From Roanoke to Bristol, 139 miles, the road is paved with no construction to interfere with traffic.

The Tidewater trail, United States route 17, has been finished from Fredericksburg through Tappahannock to Gloucester Point, except about 5 miles between Tappahannock and Saluda which is scheduled to be completed by the last of the coming week.

On United States route 60, from the West Virginia line near White Sulphur Springs to Lexington and Natural Bridge, there was no construction going on, and the road was in good condition. Between Natural Bridge and Lynchburg there was a short section of construction near Natural Bridge station, and it was necessary for traffic to use about a mile of the old soil road. From Lynchburg to Farmville and Richmond the road is in good condition except on several short sections between Richmond and Amelia, which are slippery and soft after the rain.

Between Richmond and Newport News there was no construction in progress. The road was being widened on one side, between Newport News and Hampton, but was causing no trouble for traffic.

Richmond-Danville Route.

There were some soft places in the Richmond-Danville road by Amelia, Burkeville, Keysville and Halifax, but the road was entirely passable.

There was a short section of muddy and slippery road on the River road, route 19, from Richmond to Columbia. The slippery stretches were at Sabot and Manquin. Each was about a half-mile, but passable. Between Columbia and Dixie construction was going on, and it was necessary for traffic to use a mile of new grade, and this section also was muddy.

Route 37 from Lilmarnock to Warsaw and Fredericksburg was hard-surfaced and in good condition. The oiling on route 38 between Fredericksburg and Warrenton has been completed and the road now is hard-surfaced.

Construction Under Way.

Construction was under way of the Broad street road, route 41, from Richmond west toward Charlottesville. The road was rough in places between Richmond City limits and Short Pump. Traffic was advised to use Patterson avenue and the Three Chopt road to Short Pump.

Oiling will be continued until the latter part of the week on route 52, the new Petersburg-Suffolk highway, from Petersburg to Waverly.

There was a short section of construction at a bridge near Waynesboro on route 39, Richmond to Staunton. Traffic was cautioned to drive slowly.

Man Pleads Guilty In Slaying Youth

Second-Degree Manslaughter Confession Entered and Ends Trial.

Special to The Washington Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 8.—Dorsey Taylor, alias Dorsey Lamb, changed his plea of not guilty to a first-degree indictment in the slaying of 18-year-old Lorenzo Marino, at Blairton, and entered a plea of guilty to second-degree manslaughter in circuit court here this morning.

He was immediately given sentence of one to eighteen years in the State Penitentiary by Judge D. H. Rodgers. Taylor made no comment when called to stand for sentence. The changed plea was entered with the consent of the prosecution and came after two days of testimony. It was entered before Taylor himself was called to the stand.

Marino was slain as he rounded up cows near his home. The State charged the slaying was deliberate, although conceding Taylor may have mistaken the youth for his father. Constable Louis Marino, who, it was testified, was regarded by Taylor and some of his friends as the agent who would probably be used against the men's alleged activity in liquor distribution. The defense claimed the shooting was accidental, saying the shot was intended for a bird in a tree.

FARM BOARD AGREES TO LEND ON APPLES

Warehouse Receipts Given for Fruit in Storage to Be Accepted.

GAIN SEEN FOR GROWERS

Special to The Washington Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 8.—The Federal Farm Loan Board has agreed to make apples in storage the basis for "warehouse receipt" loans, it was announced here by Gray Silver, cooperative leader and former legislative representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, who has been working toward this end for some time.

The Federal Farm Land Bank has for several years accepted warehouse receipts of grain and other farm staples in elevator and storage as the security for loans, at 4 per cent interest, but until now, has held that apples, with other fruits, were too perishable.

Acceptance of stored apples as a basis for loans will mean much to growers in all commercial belts, believes Mr. Silver, in allowing them to carry their fruit out of the harvesting rush into the later months for better markets. Crop advances hitherto have been made by banks at 6 per cent, on bankable security, or have been extended privately by some of the fruit-handling agencies.

Climax of Program.

Loans made on the warehouse receipts to those owning the apples in storage will be made through Federal Intermediate Credit Bank.

The decision of the United States farm bankers to include apples along with grains and farm staples in their money-lending program comes as the third and climaxing step to the work of a group of men in this section looking toward cooperative organization of the entire Shenandoah-Potomac-Pennsylvania apple belt.

The first step was accomplished with organization of Growers Fruit Exchange, over-organization for the dozen local cooperative apple-handling units of the belt. The Growers Fruit Exchange was incorporated with an authorized $1,000,000 capital.

Just recently the Growers Credit Corporation, a subsidiary to Growers Fruit Exchange, has been chartered by West Virginia. Its purpose is to make possible a close tie-up between the Growers Fruit Exchange and the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, through which warehouse certificates of fruits and kindred products deposited in recognized warehouses become the security for money loans to those holding the fruit in warehouses.

Gray Silver President.

The Growers Credit Corporation has Gray Silver as president, Frank Robinson, Charles Town, W. Va., as vice president, and Hugh W. Prettyman, Inwood, W Va., secretary-treasurer. Directors are Fred Robinson, Winchester, Va., representing Valley Fruit Exchange; Gray Silver, representing Inwood Fruit Growers; Frank Robinson, of Jefferson Fruit Exchange; H. C. Warden, of Bettletown (Va.) Fruit Exchange, and C. D. Wysong, Shepherdstown (W. Va.) Fruit Exchange.

Growers Credit Corporation, like its parent, the Growers Fruit Exchange, has authorized capital of $1,000,000, with 2,000 shares of common stock at par value of $100 and 8,000 shares of preferred at $100 par value. The Credit Corporation will have before the winter is over, believes Mr. Silver, $100,000 paid up of the authorized capital.

Crimson Lead Erased by Aerial

Wolverines Score in Last Period When Trailing, 3-0.

Battle to Deadlock for 3 Quarters of See-Saw Battle.

By B. L. KING.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 8 (A. P.).—The fleet feet of Roy Hudson, Michigan full back, today gave the undefeated Wolverines a 6-to-3 victory over a stubborn Harvard eleven that had four chances to put over a touchdown during the tight, hard-fighting encounter that thrilled 55,000 spectators, who almost filled the stadium.

The Crimson's running attack, however, stalled each time it neared the Michigan goal line and Barry Wood put one of his three drop-kicks between the posts for the Harvard score which came in the final period shortly before Hudson took a 20-yard pass from the spectacular Harry Newman and galloped 30 yards to register the first Cambridge touchdown that the Wolverines have made in 50 years.

Battle Even One for Three Periods.

The battle was an even affair for three periods, during which the rival lines played with such savage fury that Michigan was turned back, in the opening period, and Harvard was forced to yield the ball, late in the third, when both appeared headed for certain success.

Each time Harvard neared the Michigan goal, one of its backs was clipped for a heavy loss on a lateral play and three times on fourth down Wood tried to put over a field goal. His first drop-kick was blocked by Morrison, the opposing center, and his second, made early in the final period barely cleared the ground. The Crimson's last chance, late in the fray, ended when a pass was grounded in the end zone.

The Crimson forces, after a slow start, began making headway in the second half and the fourth period was seconds-old when the Harvard running attack came to a dead stop on Michigan's 12-yard line. On fourth down, Wood dropped back to the Wolverines' 25-yard line and booted his third try for a field goal between the posts for the three points. The ball was low and kicked from an angle but it was good by several feet.

Michigan then kicked off to Harvard but regained the ball after a few plays, when Art Huguely punted to the Wolverines' 33-yard line. Wheeler, Newman and Hudson ripped off timely gains on end runs and Michigan had a first down on Harvard's 35-yard line.

Newman then backed up to the 50-yard line, waited until Hudson, whose jersey, fore and aft, bore the supposedly ill-fated No. 13, had blocked it and O'Connell recovered for a touchdown. Vodsleys place-kicked the extra point.

The B. C. lead was short-lived, however. A pass from Scalzi to Danieu after the ensuing kick-off was good for 58 yards and a first down on B. C.'s 7-yard line, but the Eagles pulled a beautiful goal-line stand and stopped Danieu on fourth down a foot from the last white mark. Colbert punted to midfield and Georgetown tried four running plays and then Bozek threw a 35-yard pass to Brennan, who caught it on a dead run 10 yards from the goal and coasted across for the score. Scalzi again kicked the extra point.

The last period opened with Georgetown fighting to hold its one-point lead, which was suddenly increased to seven when Bozek produced the most brilliant individual effort of the game. With the ball on his own 20-yard line and standing in kick formation, the Georgetown half back faked a kick, shot toward his own right end, reversed sharply behind the line of scrimmage, wriggled through a mass of B. C. secondaries to the left sideline and streaked 80 yards along the margin of the field for a touchdown. Three Boston College pursuers lunged savagely at him in the last 10 yards, but he shook them all off and toe danced his way to the goal without stepping outside. Leary missed the extra point.

Boston College took the following kick-off and in desperation turned to the air. Colbert threw a 30-yard pass to Dixon, who was downed as he caught it on the Georgetown 45-yard line. Antos then passed to Colbert for 18 yards. The running attack then carried several yards and a 15-yard roughing penalty put the ball on the 3-yard line when Antos plunged across for the score.

Coach McKenney then rushed in Chesnulivich, a drop-kicking expert, to tie the score, but a desperate Georgetown line broke through on him so fast he had no time to get the ball away and his effort to run with it was smothered on the line of scrimmage.

The last few minutes were jammed with thrills as B. C. rained passes to all corners of the field and Georgetown, again battling savagely to hold a 1-point lead, threw caution against a running attack to the winds and played a four-man line, scattering aerial defenders clear back to her goal as players and MARCHING backward most of the time, the Generals, of Washington and Lee, were made to look like buck privates out for their first lesson at College Park yesterday afternoon as the Terrapins of Maryand University dashed pell-mell to a Southern Conference victory, 41 to 7, before a home-coming day crowd of 7,500.

The game was decided in the first half when the Terrapins unloosed a mighty and varied attack that completely bewildered their guests. The score at intermission was 34 to 0.

The Notre Dame system, as taught by Gene Oberst, former Irish star, and the "Washington and Lee Swing," the General's famous school song, made no impression at all during that wild first half. Before the game closed, however, the system and the song did manage to gain some respectful attention, but this was due only to the sportsmanlike action of Coach Curly Byrd, who purposely flooded the field with Maryland reserve players, thus weakening his attack.

Maryland's domination of the proceedings came to light in the first two minutes of play when Bosey Berger, the game's leading individual scorer, caught a pass from Chalmers in the end zone. From then until the second quarrter closed the Old Line swept all opposition out of its path.

It is doubtful if any Maryland eleven in the past decade had an offense as powerful, as deceptive or as speedy as that with which the Black and Gold delighted its supporters yesterday. Double and triple passes behind the line, simple forward passes, tricky laterals, straight line bucks, off-tackle slants and reverses composed the collection of plays which were executed in almost faultless fashion under the heady direction of Ray Poppelman, the Old Line's recruit from the Marine Corps.

The result gave Maryland its second victory in a series with the Generals that covers six games. Maryland first downed Washington and Lee in 1923, the last time they met prior to yesterday. It also was Maryland's fourth successive triumph of the season and its third over Virginia "Big Four" members. The scalp of Virginia Poly remains to be taken for a clean Old Line sweep.

To Berger, Poppelman and George Chalmers go the major part of the day's honors, but hardly a man in the Maryland first string did not perform creditably. There was some exby the mighty Irish were produced on quick line thrusts that simply catapulted Savoldi, Brill Schwartz, Mullins and O'Conner into the open at top speed.

No such offensive charging, such superb blocking or spectacular interference has been witnessed in the East in a dozen pale blue moons.

It was team play at its peak in every respect, and Penn's defense, stouthearted though it was, could not cope with it. Eight touchdown marches ranged from 15 to 77 yards in length, from 1 to 10 plays in execution. There was nearly always a long run to furnish an artistic climax. Besides those of Brill, the most brilliant were a 63-yard dash by Paul O'Conner and another of 44 yards by Moon Mullins.

Four Touchdowns on Sixteen Plays.

The four touchdowns scored in the first half, within actual playing time of about 10 minutes, were produced on a total of sixteen plays. Four more touchdowns in the third period were the outcome of a total of only thirteen plays. It was a potential touchdown every time one of the Rockne regulars got past the line of scrimmage. Not a single pass was tried nor was the aerial game needed, so effective and deceptive was the Irish running attack directed faultlessly by Carideo, who contributed one touchdown himself and booted five extra points.

First downs meant little or nothing to such an offensive but for purposes of record they were 15 to 7 in Notre Dame's favor.

Penn's running attack was stoppped cold by the great Irish line. The first Quaker touchdown was the result of a blocked kick and recovery by Joe Wilson, guard, who ran 45

LEHIGH WINS, 13 TO 9, OVER PRINCETON

Scores First Victory Over Tigers in 43 Years of Rivalry.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—For the first time in their 43-year-old football rivalry, Lehigh defeated Princeton here in Palmer Stadium today, 13 to 9. Lehigh scored two touchdowns in the opening quarter, while Princeton scored its only touchdown in the second, annexing two additional points in the final period on a safety.

The Tigers outplayed the Engineers in every period having a total of 18 first downs to 4 for the visitors, but, as has been the case all season, they were unable to supply the necessary punch when near the goal line.

Long Dashes in First Period Win for Lehigh.

The Lehigh scores came before the first period was half over on 60-yard dashes by Halstead and Clark. The former made his gain off tackle while Clark intercepted a pass. The Tiger attack got going in the second quarter, and after being repulsed once in the shadow of the goal, Knell crossed the line on an off tackle plunge.

Princeton continued to threaten in the third and fourth periods, but were four times held for downs within the 20-yard line. As the game drew to a close Ware attempted to punt from behind his own goal, but Purnell rushed into block it. The ball bounded behind the end zone and when Mestres recovered it Princeton had only 2 additional points instead of 6. Lehigh had the ball deep in Tiger territory as the game ended.

plays took the ball to Navy's 14-yard line. Benis then raced to his left and threw to Full Back Bob Horn, who leaped up high in the end zone and took the pass for the fourth touchdown.

Marty Varner was nearer and more in the clear, but Benis gambled and won. The Navy line was offside on Ehrnesberger's kick for the extra point and it was awarded to Ohio.

The showing of Larkins at end on defense, the work of Holcomb on offense and the play of Gene Baumgarten, a substitute tackle, were outstanding in Ohio's play.

Little Lou Kirn, the Navy's hope, the hero of the Dartmouth game last year, almost got away on half a dozen occasions, but never for very long.

A crowd of 45,000 watched the game.

FORDHAM 13-7 VICTOR OVER DETROIT

Rams Score Twice in Last Period, Saving Record.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—After three periods of ineffective football, Fordham came to life with a bang in the final period, scored two touchdowns and trounced the University of Detroit, 13 to 7, here today to keep their record clean. Approximately 20,000 persons watched the contest under ideal weather conditions.

But for a sensational 75-yard run by Bill O'Neill, sparkling left half back, of the Detroit Team, the Fordham battering rams would have kept intact their reputation of an uncrossed goal line.

O'Neill Intercepts Pass To Score.

O'Neill, intercepting a pass from Fisher, the Fordham quarter back, in the second period, gathered the oval into his arms on the Detroit 25-yard line and stepped the distance to the goal line untouched by Fordham players. Rocky Parsaca, Titan quarter back, drop-kicked the extra point for what proved to be the last scoring of the day for the home team.

The hard-running game of the Titans and the vaunted battering of Fordham found stone-wall opposition in the early part of the game, and both teams took to the air. A long pass from Fisher to Murphy was instrumental in taking the Fordham machine once to the Detroit 3-yard

Army's Last-Half Offensive Beats Illinois Team, 13-0

By WESTBROOK PEGLER.
Special to The Washington Post.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—The Army marched through the Illinois line in their return game at the Yankee Stadium this afternoon and won, 13 to 0, on two touchdowns and one conversion, all scored in the second half. Ray Steckler, sophomore, from Hazelton, Pa., the boy who butted Killday in the trousers at Yale's goal for the controversial touchdown at New Haven, made both touchdowns for the West Point Cadets, one on an end run, the other by a 40-yard sprint after intercepting a forward pass, in the last few minutes of play.

The first half was a fairly even contest, but the Illinois forward line was firmly broken in sections, and the sections were pushed widely apart as the West Point Team rolled to the goal in the third period to loosen the tension of the 70,000 fans with the first scoring play. Illinois had one chance to score, an attempt at a field goal in the first quarter, but Berry's kick, shot from the 35-yard line, fell short.

The Army used a long list of personnel, including some cadets of no previous experience in a big game, also including Cy Letzeiter, the old Carnegie Tech star, who no longer ago than Wednesday afternoon was described as weak from fever and dangerous throat infection. He proved a highly interesting convalescent, and, while he didn't play the whole game, he was out on the yard, tumbling and diving in the rough merry-making of a desperate game long enough to demonstrate remarkable powers of recuperation.

Steckler comes from the same public high school in Hazleton that sent Harry Wilson to West Point for perhaps the brightest football career ever enjoyed by any inmate of the old stone barracks. Thus far, the new boy is well along toward a repetition of the other young man's achievements.

The second half of the game was a fairly accurate justification of the probabilities as measured before hand by the previous records of the teams. The Army had subtlety and trained skill behind the line and solid power

TOURIST II WINS MANLY STEEPLECHASE AT PIMLICO

$10,000 Event Attracts 30,000

Beelzebub Is Second With Gracie Finishing Third.

Weight-for-Age Secondary Feature Is Won by Balko.

By J. B. SNODGRASS.

Special to The Washington Post.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 8.—The Sanford Stud Farm's Tourist II, W. Hunt up, won the Manly Memorial $10,000 added, Steeplechase Handicap at 2½ miles, by 8 lengths, and E. R. Bradley's Beelzebub was second, with Dr. J. Fred Adams' mare, Gracie, third. The running of this race in its fourteenth renewal attracted to the Pimlico track the largest crowd of the meeting, and prominent in the throng of 30,000 people were many society folk from New York, Washington, Pennsylvania and Maryland.

In the throng were Vice President Charles Curtis, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Gann, sister of the Vice President, and Gov. Ritchie of Maryland, several ambassadors, members of legations and others prominent in official life of Washington. The day was perfect for the enjoyment of outdoor sport.

McKinney Bruised When Actor Falls.

The running mate of the winner, Ivory II, fell on the second round of the course, with H. Jeffcott; Thomas Hitchcock's Actor fell with Rigan McKinney. Conterburb and Tourist II jumped from the yellow flag. Actor was in front. He took the lead, but stumbled on his knees when Ivory fell, recovered and later went down. His rider, Mr. McKinney, was badly bruised, striking the turf and being dragged several feet on his face.

Tourist II soon took the lead after this mishap and won with ridiculous ease from Beelzebub, paying $4.50. The time was 4:49. The purse paid members $9,225 to the winner, $2,000 to second and $1,000 to third. Speckled Beauty, fourth, received $500.

Stephen (Laddie) Sanford received the gold cup trophy, which goes with the Manly.

When Gov. Ritchie went to the stewards' stand after the running of the Manley Memorial to present the cup, he was greeted with great warmth by the throng, and when the band played the inevitable, "My Maryland," the ovation approached bedlam. Five thousand people went to the infield during the running of the steeplechase.

Symbol Easy Winner Of Opener.

E. M. Byers Symbol, overhauling Burgoo at the first turn, led all the balance of the mile and 70 yards first race, winning by four lengths. The Tranquillity Farms' Minesweeper overtook J. E. Widener's Stellanova at the sixteenth and won the second money, while the Widener colt held third, with Prince Peter fourth. The start was good. Dark Ray had early speed, but got in a tangle. Peter Walls rode the winner, which paid $10.70 for a $2 ticket.

Walter J. Salmon's Ladder made every post a winning one in the Annapolis Handicap for 2-year-olds, but was ridden out by Schaeffer to withstand the closing dash of Dixiana Farms' Sweep All. In fact, Sweep All was at the heels of Ladder all the way, but Ladder had something left at the instant he appeared beaten and got the decision by a head. Howard E. Maxwell's Viola was third. Hibala finished fourth. Schaeffer had the mount on the Salmon colt, and attended strictly to the job. The Whitney entry was out of the money, but smear showed early speed. The winner was favorite at $4.80 for $2. The race was a fast one, 6 furlongs in 1:12 flat.

Star Crest Extended to Cop Fourth.

The Equity Purse at a mile and a sixteenth, fourth race, was won by the Hastings Stable's Star Crest in a whipping finish. The Lemar Stock Farm's Make Believe was second, beaten a half length. Ryland H. New's Wrackell was third, and Ruane fourth. Star Crest led from the gate. In the early running, Coin Collector was forcing the pace, but soon dropped out of contention. Wrackell moved up third when Coin Collector quit. Ruane lost ground on the stretch turn. The winner paid $15.40.

The Pimlico weight for age race, for all-aged horses, fifth on the program, had only four starters after Peto, Judge Schilling, Sweep All and Black Majesty had been withdrawn. The Sagamore Stables' Balko was made the odds-on favorite. Balko won by a neck, with Bejshak up and carrying 130 pounds. Happy Scott, a 2-year-old of Admiral Grayson's was second, beaten a neck. W. R. Coe's Maya was third. The other starter was Oesel, owned by A. C. Bostwick and ridden by G. H. Bostwick, son of the owner, who had previously ridden Speckled Beauty in the Steeplechase.

The six furlongs was the fastest of the meeting, 1:11 4-5. Happy Scott led to the sixteenth, when Balko, which had lost ground on the turn, caught the flying Grayson colt. The purse was $4,000 added. The field was made up of a 2-year-old, a 3, a 4 and Balko, which is 5 years old. Balko again proved that he is probably the best sprinter on the turf. He paid $3.50.

Dr. Freeland Makes Double For Salmon.

Walter J. Salmon's Dr. Freeland won the sixth race by a head from K. E. Hitt's Hot Toddy, making a double for the New York owner. E. R. Bradley's Mirbat was third, and the Wheatley Stables' Adequate fourth. King of the River was the other starter. Schaefer piloted both of the Salmon horses. The winner paid $10.10. Dr. Freeland was held off the early pace, set by Hot Toddy, with Adequate second. Hot Toddy was the favorite but was nipped in a long stretch drive.

Baba Kenny and Risque Best Of Year's Ordinary Fillies

No Anita Peabody, Salley's Alley or Blossom Time Uncovered in Season's Debut of Two-Year-Olds; Tambour Promising.

By GEORGE DALEY.

E. R. BRADLEY'S Baba Kenny and Mrs. John D. Hertz's Risque are running head and head for the 2-year-old filly honors of the current racing season. Preston M. Burch's Tambour beat them both in the rich Selima Stakes at Laurel a few days ago, but she was getting seven pounds from one and five from the other. Still, she is not far away, and close on the heels of the three come H. P. Gardner's Betty Derr and the Goodstone Stable's Blind Lane.

These five have won $20,000 or more each, with Baba Kenny at the top with $28,350, but only $180 in front of Tambour. Blind Lane is the leader in the number of races won with seven, but she had greater opportunities with eighteen starts. Betty Derr has the highest percentage of victories by winning six out of nine. Tambour had the easiest campaign, scoring in three out of only five starts.

Betty Derr is the outstanding filly of the Middle West and some handicappers rate her above both Baba Kenny and Risque. That question is open for debate. It is one which can be settled only on the track and not possible this season. She ran unplaced behind Mate and Pennate in the Breeders' Futurity, just as Baba Kenny and Risque were far back among the trailers behind Jamestown, Equipoise and Mate in the Futurity at Belmont Park.

Female Not More Deadly Than Male.

There have been racing years when the female of the species were more deadly than the male, as Kipling suggested. It was so in 1922, when Salley's Alley beat Zev in the Futurity and went on to win the Pimlico Futurity. That was the year in which the Maryland Jockey Club, in generous mood, split the latter race because of the number of entries and gave the full purse of $41,000 to each division. Blossom Time, also a filly, and the dam of Blue Larkspur, winning the second half. It largely was true also in 1924, when the late H. P. Whitney's Mother Goose beat the best of the colts, and even in 1927, when Anita Peabody beat Reigh Count. Victorian and others in the Futurity of that year.

It has been far from true this season. The fillies, on the whole, have been well below the standards of the leading colts. Morshion did run a dead heat with Mate last June, but she dropped off and he came on to be the best of the year. John D. Hertz was confident that Risque would prove her quality and rate as a second Anita Peabody by beating Jamestown and other good colts in the Belmont Park Futurity, but he overestimated her ability. Neither she nor Baba Kenny were up to such a task, and their level was found and also that of Betty Derr when beaten off by Mate in the Breeders' Futurity.

Zelide Trained Off After Beating Baba Kenny.

Zelide, unbeaten in two races, might have been the best of the year. She trained off after beating Baba Kenny and others in the Fashion Stakes last spring and was retired for the season. Tom Healey held her in high favor, as he did Summer Day, which suffered an accident in the paddock at the Aqueduct spring meeting and was also retired. They were the best of the late H. P. Whitney fillies. Panasette and Thais disappointed.

Both Baba Kenny and Risque have their boosters for top rating. The former owes her leadership in money earned to her impressive victory in the Matron Stakes, in which her chief rival was not a starter. She made the running in the rich Spinway Stakes at Saratoga Springs but Risque conceding some weight, came from behind to beat her a head. She ran fourth in the Selima Stakes, again behind Risque, but so far as she was concerned the race was not truly run. Renick had her in all kinds of trouble and many insisted that she was best.

Risque Came Through In Lassie Stakes.

Risque won the Lassie Stakes at Arlington Park, and as told, the Spinway at Saratoga Spring, but was beaten once by Morshion and another time by Blind Lane in the Beldame Handicap when trying to give away eight pounds.

Tambour, a daughter of Gen. Thatcher and Castanet by Frizzle, has won three races including the Selima Stakes.

Betty Derr has three stakes to her credit—the Debutante of Louisville, the Debutante of Washington Park, and the Clipsetta.

Blind Lane is a pony in size but a giant in heart. A filly of fine balance and high speed, she had stood up over a stiff campaign in the most creditable way.

Leading Fillies

Following are the leading fillies of the season—a baker's dozen arranged in the order of their earnings, which is not far from order of their merit or rating:

LADDER, hurried to the front and setting a rapid pace, went to a severe drive when challenged early, holding on with determination to get in the last stride. SWEEP ALL, close up from the start, gained a brief lead nearing the final furlong pole, but runs badly in the final sixteenth. VOILA finished resolutely after being outrun early. HIBALA was unable to stay with the leaders. SMEAR tired. PORTCODINE had no mishaps.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TOURIST II, $4.50, $2.80, $2.50; BEELZEBUB, $7.20, $5.00; GRACIE, $6.10.

TOURIST II, restrained for the first two miles, was kept on the outside of the field from the start, moved up steutly to join the leaders the last half mile, went into an easy lead when ACTOR fell, shook off BEELZEBUB and was under a stout pull at the end. BEELZEBUB saved a lot of ground when moving into contention, took the fifteenth fence on even terms with the winner, but was stopping rapidly at the finish. GRACIE finished with good courage and outstayed SPECKLED BEAUTY II. Latter came again in the final test. CANTERBURY was used up racing with ACTOR. ROONEY lost rider at the fifteenth jump. ACTOR fell at the thirteenth and IVORY II fell at the sixth.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,300. Equity Claiming Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:55. Off at 2:59. STAR CREST, assuming command when outfooting his field to the first turn, was steadied a bit when forced to a drive and, holding on tenaciously, outstayed MAKE BELIEVE. Latter, outrun early, secured racing room on the inside and was gradually wearing the winner down. RUANE finished resolutely. COIN COLLECTOR faltered when put to a drive. MERIDIAN QUEEN stopped.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALKO, $3.50, $2.30, out; HAPPY SCOT, $2.50, out; MAYA, out.

BALKO, breaking fast, was taken under slight restraint while following the pacemakers closely, moved to HAPPY SCOT with a rush when approaching the home stretch, secured command in the last furlong and, under stout pressure, just lasted. HAPPY SCOT, displaced high speed, moved into a winning lead, but was unable to resist the winner. MAYA had no mishaps. OESEL was outrun.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DOCTOR FREELAND, $10.10, $2.80, $2.70; HOT TODDY, $2.20, $2.10; MIRBAT, $2.10.

DOCTOR FREELAND, away promptly and steadied within striking distance of the leaders, challenged when entering the home stretch, wore HOT TODDY down gradually and outfinished the latter. HOT TODDY was rushed to the front, resisted early contention from ADEQUATE, but faltered in the closing test. MIRBAT, taken back directly after the start, was allowed to settle in his stride, slipped through on the inside at the stretch turn and finished gamely. ADEQUATE weakened in the final issue. KING OF THE RIVER raced well.

32 ELIGIBLES FOR BOWIE FEATURE

Lady Broadcast, Sun Beau in Field for $30,000 Purse.

Special to The Washington Post.

BOWIE, Md., Nov. 8.—Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Sun Beau, considered by many as the present season's handicap champion, is included in the 32 nominations that have been handed into Race Secretary Joseph McLennan for the $30,000 Southern Maryland Handicap, mile and one-sixteenth race to be run here on Saturday, November 22.

The Southern Maryland was inaugurated in 1922 and has been won by such good horses as Lucky Hour, Reparation, Donaghee, Sarazen, Glister, Cloudland, Misstep and Bateau, but no field has ever contained the class that is eligible for this year's struggle.

Misstep Holds Time Record For Race.

The Le Mar Stock Farm's Misstep holds the time record of 1:44 1-5 for the Southern Maryland. That establishment has no representative this year, but the West will have several worthy representatives in Roger Caldwell's Lady Broadcast, winner of the Lincoln Fields and Chicago Business Men's Handicap; Mrs. John D. Hertz's Valenciennes, who was second in the $15,000 Maryland Handicap; Marshall Field's Phalanx and Rigan McKinney's Inception.

The Southern Maryland is one of the richest fall stakes run in America. The host organization has been adding to its value yearly and if interest does not diminish the race promises to become the richest handicap for all ages run anywhere in the world so late in the season.

The official list of nominations as released today follow:

Arden Farms' Sun Edwin and Sun Shadow; Audley Farm's Woodcraft; Belair Stud's Feto, A. C. Bostwick's Ossel, Rogers Caldwell's Lady Broadcast, Marshall Field's Phalanx, W. Foreman's Ned O. Chaffee Earl's Jim Dandy, Mrs. John D. Hertz's Valenciennes, Dr. J. Jacobs' Sun Mission, Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Sun Beau, Sun Falcon and Sun Memory.

S. W. Labrot's Dinah Did Upset and Fortunate Youth, J. He Loucheim's Grey Coat, J. R. Macomber's Peter Wreck, Rigan McKinney's Inception, Ral Parr's Her Grace, C. H. Pierce's The Heathen, Rancocas Stable's Mokatam and Khara, Sagamore Stable's Balko, Walter J. Salmon's Dr. Freeland, Sanford Stud Farm's Starpatic, John F. Schoor's Crossbones and Jock, M. Shea's Sandy Ford, H. P. Whitney's Hatbroom and William Ziegler, Jr.'s, Spinach and Polydor.

Lassie Stakes.

Betty Derr has three stakes to her credit—the Debutante of Louisville, the Debutante of Washington Park, and the Clipsetta.

Blind Lane is a pony in size but a giant in heart. A filly of fine balance and high speed, she had stood up over a stiff campaign in the most creditable way.

NORTHWESTERN NEAR BIG TEN TITLE WITH VICTORY

Bruder Stars In Rout of Indiana

Hoosiers Bow, 25-0, to Running, Passing of Wild Cats.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Northwestern's powerful football eleven swept aside Indiana, 25 to 0, in its dash toward a Western Conference championship before a home-coming crowd of 15,000 here today.

The Wildcats, their appetite for victory whetted by the memory of Indiana upset victories of the last three years, presented irresistible strength in the line and a deceptive passing attack. The Hoosier jinx was completely smothered.

Hank Bruder, the hard luck boy of the Big Ten, led the Purple team to victory with his running and accurate tosses to waiting teammates. The big Wildcat line opened wide holes in the Indiana defense through which Russell and Moore plunged for whatever yardage was needed.

Meanwhile, the Hoosiers were unable to dent Northwestern's defense. Marvil, giant tackle, and Woodworth, tow-headed guard, were all over the field in every play, smothering Indiana plays almost before the backs got started.

Ross Throttled Down By Defense.

Ross, the Wabash, Ind., boy who turned defeat into victory at Evanston a year ago with long runs in the last eight minutes, was throttled by the smashing charges of the Northwestern forwards today.

The Wildcats wasted no time in proving their superiority. Taking on Hoosier punts early in the first period on their own 28-yard line, the Purple backs broke through for two first downs and then Bruder passed to Russell, 36 yards away on the Crimson 5-yard line. Indiana held twice, but on the third attempt Russell plunged over, and Bruder place-kicked goal. Taking the next kick-off, the Wildcats marched 70 yards on power plays for another score by Russell. Bruder missed the try for point.

Again Northwestern received a kick-off and with the start of the second quarter a lateral and two forward passes, Bruder to Hall and Bruder to Oliphant, added another six points.

The Wild Cat reserves started to go in, and with Dauer, subbing for Brubaker at quarter for Indiana, getting off several long punts, the Hoosiers came to life and threatened for the first time with a first down on Northwestern's 23-yard line. The attack was batted, however, and Dauer's attempted place kick was blocked. Bruder contributed the game's longest run just before the half ended, intercepting a pass and rambled 56 yards to the Crimson 19-yard line. The gun ended the threat.

Hoosiers Miss Chance To Score.

The Hoosiers played the Purple first stringers on almost even terms throughout the third period and early in the final quarter had their best chance to score. Hanley fumbled Hughes' punt and Zeller recovered on the Northwestern 24-yard line. Sabuski, substituting for Koenig, made it first down, but line attempts and a pass failed.

Three more passes—Bruder to Hanley, Bruder to Moore, and Hanley to Bruder—for a touchdown, ended the Wildcat's scoring just before the game ended.

Northwestern piled up a total of 364 yards gained against 126 by the Indians, and sixteen first downs to nine for the Hoosiers. It was the fourth successive game and the fifth this season in which Indiana failed to score.

Nebraska Surprises Kansas Eleven, 16 to 0

Memorial Stadium, Lawrence, Kans., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Nebraska decisively defeated Kansas in a big six conference football game today 16 to 0. The defeat was unexpected in the thoroughness with which the conference champions outplayed Kansas, undefeated in titular play until today.

Jim Bausch, Kansas half back, played more than half the game. A home-coming crowd estimated at 20,000, saw the game, played under ideal weather conditions.

South. Methodist Wins First Conference Game

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Although they hold a decision over Indiana, the Southern Methodist University footballers today broke into the Southwest Conference victory column for the first time, defeating Texas A. and M., 13 to 7.

The Aggies in defeat, were not subdued. They completely outplayed the passing Methodists in the last quarter, showing the Dallas team a few things about the air game, and marching from their own 10-yard line to a touchdown.

Wiener Hero for Yale In Alfred's Rout, 66-0

Yale Bowl, New Haven, Conn., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Little Alfred College, a coed school in the hills of southern New York, today proved to be exactly what Yale hoped and expected—an easy football prey.

With Sandy Wiener, a star on the tennis courts, and Charlie Heim, a booth-sized quarter back from Danbury, Conn., leading the way, the sons of Eli, with all of their regulars out of the game, swamped Alfred, 66 to 0. Alfred held the Blue to a pair of touchdowns and a safety in the first half, but the second developed into a complete rout. Dazzling runs by Heim and Wiener and line smashes by Conklin slashed the Orange and Purple defense to shreads, and scores came thick and fast.

Wiener scored four touchdowns, three in the final quarter. Albie Booth and five other regulars got the results of the Alfred slaughter at Cambridge, where they went with Head Coach Mal Stevens to see Harvard play Michigan.

PURDUE WINS IN SECOND HALF

Comes From Behind to Beat Chicago by 26-7 Score.

STAGG FIELD, Chicago, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Coach Amos Alonzo Stagg and his luckless Chicago Maroons threw an old-fashioned suprise party for Purdue's Boilermakers today, but it did not last long enough. The Staggian party extended through the first half, when the Maroons astounded the Boilermakers by scoring their first touchdown in five major games and taking a one-point lead.

But Purdue came back in regulation style, and captured the game by the customary one-sided margin of 26 to 7. The Boilermaker riveteers, Roy Horstman, Hal Chasey, Eddie Risk and Jimmy Purvis, led the way in the last half stampede and won the game almost as they pleased. It was the fourth straight victory for the Boilermakers, who still possess a mathematical chance for the Big Ten title despite their 1-point defeat in their first game against Michigan.

Intercepted Pass Nets Chicago Lone Touchdown.

An intercepted pass by Gene Buzzell, Maroon half back, netted Chicago its only score of the game, and the score that shook up the Boilermakers in the second period.

Purdue, which started hopefully with a second-string line and a first-string back field, immediately sent in its entire first team and got the advantage of a great break to push over its first touchdown. With the ball on Chicago's 23-yard line after a long, line smashing march, the Boilermakers failed to gain as the gun sounded, ending the half.

A Chicago player was offside on the play, however, and Purdue was granted another try, which succeeded when Risk passed 18 yards to Chasey, who caught the ball over the Maroon line. Risk's attempt for the extra point failed when his place kick went wide.

The full fury of the Boilermaker attack, long pent up by penalties and fumbles, broke suddenly in the third period when Risk and Horstman plowed over for touchdowns. The final Purdue score came in the fourth period when the Boilermakers forgot their fumbling ways and marched 65 yards for a score.

Texas Christian Wins Over Rice Team, 20-0

Rice Field, Houston, Tex., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Texas Christian University, 1929 Southwest Conference football champion, defeated Rice Institute, 20 to 0, today to keep its 1930 record bare of defeats.

Martin's block of an Institute punt early in the first period indirectly brought about the first touchdown. He downed the ball on the Rice 4-yard line. Griffith smashed over the goal line. He also kicked the point.

In the second period Half Back Spearman intercepted a Rice pass and dashed 53 yards for a touchdown.

Western Maryland Conquers Carroll, 27-0

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Steese Brubaker, chunky half back, pierced John Carroll's defense today to lead Western Maryland to its nineteenth straight football victory and its twenty-third game without a defeat—27 to 0.

Brubaker scored two touchdowns, tossed a pass to Capt. Bates, end, for another, and in addition kept Carroll backed up by some great punting. He stiff-armed three tacklers in rounding right end for 25 yards and a touchdown at the start.

In the third period Brubaker tossed a 20-yard pass to Bates, who ran 30 yards to score.

Brubaker caught Koppe's 10-yard pass and ran 5 yards for the third touchdown in the fourth period. Bolton, a substitute, caught a short punt, and ran for the touchdown.

Chuck Culotta, full back, was Carroll's only offensive threat, and also a defensive savior many times.

Wisconsin Tramples South Dakota State

Madison, Wis., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—South Dakota State folded up today before the powerful offense of Wisconsin and finished on the short end of a 58 to 7 score.

South Dakota's lone touchdown came in the closing minutes of play as the result of a 67-yard run by L. Nelson, half back. It was the day's most spectacular play.

The game, in the nature of an off-week scrimmage for the Badgers as they prepared for Northwestern's undefeated eleven, saw Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite use reserve matter for all but the last four minutes.

Wisconsin scored in the first four minutes and grew better as the game progressed. The Badgers scored twice in the second period, and three times in each of the final stanzas.

Alabama Brushes Aside Florida in Dixie Title Drive

Crimson Tide, With Campbell and Cain Starring Behind a Strong Forward Wall, Triumphs by 20 to 0 Count.

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The University of Alabama brushed aside another opponent in a rush for another Southern Conference championship, defeating the University of Florida 20 to 0 here today. Johnny Campbell and Johnny Cain led the attack of the Big Red Behemoths of Tuscaloosa behind a line that held the hard-hitting "Red" Bethea, of the Gators, powerless.

Campbell scored two of the three Alabama touchdowns, the first in the opening period and the second during Alabama's crushing fourth quarter drive. Tucker scored the Tide's final touchdown, also in the fourth period.

Capt. Clements, a tackle, was the only Alabama regular to start the game, but with the opening of the second quarter, Alabama rushed in her first string players. Taking the ball near midfield, the Big Red Team carried the ball to the 4-yard line, where it was lost on downs. A poor Florida punt gave the eventual winners another chance, however, and this time Campbell broke loose for 21 yards and a touchdown.

The Gators smothered Suther, the brilliant Alabama back, in the third session, but Campbell made good again soon after the opening of the final period, going over from the 2-yard line. Cain was hurt later in the period and Tucker, who replaced him, added the third touchdown, smashing the ball over in two plays from the 5-yard line.

Hurley, Summerall Confer On Renewal of Navy Game

(Associated Press.)

SECRETARY OF WAR HURLEY yesterday began an active consideration of the question of the resumption of athletic relations between the Army and Naval Academies.

The war secretary conferred with Gen. Charles P. Summerall, chief of staff, but both declined to comment after their meeting. They had before them appeals for both a post-season football game this year to raise unemployment funds and a regularly scheduled game in 1931.

The impression in Army circles was that the rift between the Army and Navy would be overcome shortly. Both Secretaries Adams and Hurley were understood to be hopeful of a settlement of the problem before the end of the present football season.

Meantime, Grover Whalen, acting for a New York citizens' committee, attempted to complete arrangements for a Navy-Fordham football game, the first in the history of the two institutions, to be played at the Polo Grounds as an unemployment benefit.

Secretary Adams said the Navy was ready to play a game, the proceeds of which would be given to a national charitable organization.

"Inasmuch as the Army has declined to play, a game with Fordham seems possible," Secretary Adams said.

Kansas Aggies Bow To West Virginians

Morgantown, W. Va., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—West Virginia's fleet Mountaineer football team added another scalp to the East's intersectional belt here today by virtue of a third period rally that carried the Mountaineers to a 28 to 7 victory over the Kansas Aggies of the Big Six.

Savoldi Denies Divorce Suit; Also Marriage

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Joe Savoldi, Notre Dame full back, denied to reporters in the Franklin Field dressing room after today's football game with the University of Pennsylvania that he is married and instituted a divorce suit before he left South Bend Thursday.

"The whole thing is news to me," he said. "I have never been married and am not seeking a divorce."

A South Bend dispatch today said that attaches of the county clerk's office there said that attorneys for Savoldi carried a divorce suit to the clerk's office, but left without filing it. Savoldi charged cruel and inhuman treatment, it was reported.

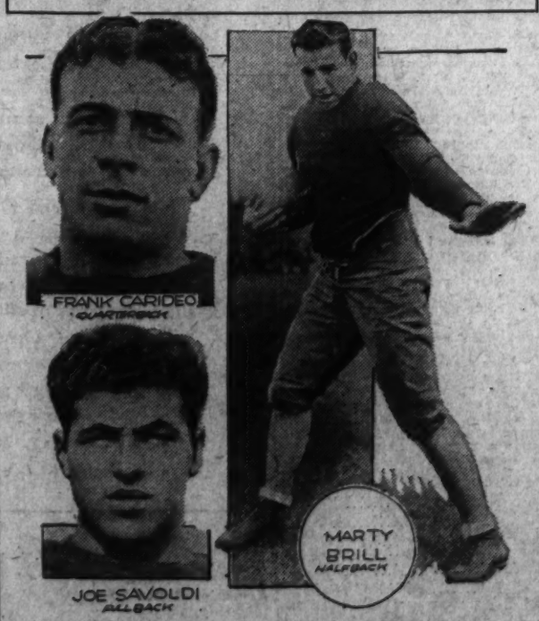
Tulane Gains 21-to-0 Victory Over Auburn

New Orleans, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Auburn today held the rolling wave of Tulane to three touchdowns. The score was 21 to 0.

The first quarter was scoreless. In the second quarter Tulane scored two touchdowns, the second of them after a 60-yard march down the field.

The final quarter again saw Tulane hitting the line for steady gains and the third touchdown.

ROCKNE'S STARS WHO ROUTED PENN



Returning to Penn two years after he was not deemed good enough to make the Quaker back field, Marty Brill scored touchdowns on runs of 67, 37 and 23 yards for Notre Dame in yesterday's 60-20 triumph of the Irish. Carideo and Savoldi also scored in addition to ripping the Quaker line to shreds.

DUKE TAMES KENTUCKY'S WILDCATS

Blue Devils Triumph, 14-7 as 15,000 See Thriller.

DURHAM, N. C., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Kentucky's crippled but snarling Wildcats were tamed here this afternoon by Duke's Blue Devils, who hung up their sixth consecutive victory, 14 to 7. More than 15,000 saw the contest, which was bitterly waged from the kickoff to the final whistle. It was Kentucky's second defeat in a row at the hands of a conference opponent.

"Shipwreck" Kelly, the visitors' star ground gainer, still suffering from injuries, played a part of the first half but his efforts at carrying the ball were smeared by the Duke defense.

Blue Devils Masters During First Half.

The Blue-Devils held the Kentuckians in check throughout the game except just at the close of the third and the beginning of the fourth periods.

A kentucky fumble led to the first Duke score in the initial period. Myer let the ball get away from him, and Bryan covered it for Duke. Bill Murray, hard running back, stepped around his own left end for 20 yards and a touchdown. Brewer hit center for the point.

In the next period, the Devils scored again. Murray retained a punt 15 yards to start the march. A first down was made on the Wildcats' 37-yard line. Brewer getting 8 through the line on the fourth try. Two more plunges gained 5 yards, Murray added 12, and Brewer scored by two tries at the line. He made the extra point by a dash around end.

Kentucky's counter came at the beginning of the fourth period as the result of a 16-yard pass, Richards to Andrews. Cavana drop-kicked accurately for the point.

Duke made six first downs, five of them in the first half, while Kentucky registered eight, six of them in the second half.

Penn State-Syracuse Wage Scoreless Tie

State College, Pa., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Penn State and Syracuse battled to a scoreless tie in their annual football tilt, with both elevens making impressive gains but lacking the punch to land a score.

Syracuse's closest approach to the State goal was the 15-yard line, where a drive ended in a fumble, Shawley recovering for the home team. This drive from midfield in the second period was Syracuse's first advance into Penn State's territory. In the last period Syracuse made a second impressive gain, carrying the ball from their own 20 to State's 34-yard line only to lose on a series of incompleted forward passes.

State carried the ball to within scoring distances twice during the game, but both drives ended in failure to score on attempted field goals. A place-kick was attempted when State was unable to penetrate the Syracuse last ditch defense.

Allegheny, Defeated, Scores on Dartmouth

Hanover, N. H., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Dartmouth continued its undefeated season by stacking a 43-to-14 defeat on the previously unbeaten Allegheny. With Cornell in the offing, Coach Cannell did not use his Green varsity eleven. As it was, the second and third-string men provided plenty of defensive practice for the Pennsylvanians.

Dartmouth chalked up 33 points in the first quarter. Cannell sent his third-string outfit into the game in the second period. Allegheny braced and marched 65 yards for the first touchdown against Dartmouth this year. In the third quarter Allegheny recovered a fumble on Dartmouth's 10-yard stripe and pushed over another touchdown. The Green team was off side on both tries for the extra point and thus Allegheny gained 2 points without effort.

Stanford 25-7 Victor Over Washington U.

Palo Alto, Calif., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Plunging and passing in a manner entirely foreign to earlier games, Stanford's Cardinals won their first major coast conference game of the season today, overpowering Washington, 25 to 7.

Playing in a drizzle, Coach Glenn Warner's red-jerseyed warriors showed 22,000 spectators they had mastered the tricky reverses and fake reverses that had failed to function before.

Behind 1 point at the end of the first period, the Cardinals suddenly came to life, beat down the sturdy Northern defense and on the crest of a spectacular passing attack, combined with sharp plunges, drove over two touchdowns in the second quarter and added another in the third after a thrust that carried them 60 yards down the field.

PITT VICTOR BY SINGLE POINT

Retains City Title by 7-6 Triumph Over Carnegie Tech.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The University of Pittsburgh defended its city football championship at the stadium this afternoon by defeating Carnegie Tech, 7 to 6, before 56,000 fans. The contest was stubbornly fought from start to finish, with the Skibo carrying the fight to the Panther much of the way.

Charley Tully, veteran Pitt tackle, was the agency that prevented the Tartans from netting a tie with the Sutherland crew, the burly warrior blocking an attempted placement kick for extra point by Capt. Johnny Dreshar in the final period, after Karcia had made a touchdown.

Pitt Scores on 55-Yard Drive.

Pitt scored in the second period after a 55-yard drive. It was no easy job for the defenders to put across the marker. Heller, Reider, Clark and Hood, who went in for Clark in the thick of the fight, advanced through the Carnegie line. A 15-yard pass helped matters along and Hood went over for the touchdown from a hair's breadth of the goal line. Capt. Eddie Baker kicked the point.

Later in the same period Carnegie let loose with a hard attack. Costly penalties forced the Skibo to punt, but Rosenzweig recovered on the Pitt eight, when Hood fumbled. The ball was advanced to the 1-foot line, where a determined Pitt machine held.

The third quarter saw a repetition of the Carnegie offensive, but the Panther could not be overcome. A 32-yard run by Kavel, Carnegie half back, was a high light.

Tech Threat Blocked in First Period.

Pitt broke up a Tech threat in the first period when Reider intercepted a pass on his own 26-yard marker, after a pass and Eyth's efforts at the line had taken the oval to the Panther 34.

The victory left Pitt to face Ohio State and Penn State with only one defeat on its record. It was the third setback for Carnegie, which has lost to Notre Dame, also victor over Pitt, New York University and, lastly, the Panther.

Washington State Wins From Idaho U., 33-7

Moscow, Ida., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Washington State College today defeated the University of Idaho football team, 33 to 7, and tonight only the University of Washington stands between the Aggies and the championship of the Pacific Coast Conference.

Idaho flashed an aerial attack, devised by Coach Calland, to offset the weight advantage of the Washington State, but the Vandals scored only once by the air.

The Cougar second string was inserted in the second half, but continued to score.

Mexico U. No Match For Mississippi Team

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Before distinguished representatives of the United States and Mexico, including the Mexican Ambassador, Mississippi College today defeated the National University of Mexico, 40 to 0, in the first international football game played in Mississippi.

Holding the Mississippians to a 13 to 0 score during the first half of the game, in which Coach Robinson used second stringers, the Mexicans were overwhelmed in the last half, when Coach Robinson sent in his second-string men.

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The Trojans of the University of Southern California rode roughshod over the University of California today, chalking up a 74 to 0 football victory.

Only in the first period was the game a contest, the Southerners starting slowly and scoring only eight points in the opening quarter. They gained momentum as they went along and the score was 28 to 0 at the half time, as part of the capacity crowd of nearly 82,000 looked on in shocked surprise. The third period was reminiscent of a field day, the Trojans running up a count of 33. They added a final 13 points in the last inning, when Coach Howard Jones had practically cleared his bench of players.

The score broke all records for the 15-year-old rivalry between the two universities.

Marquette Beats Iowa, 7-0, in Brilliant Game

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Marquette, playing a Big Ten opponent for the first time since 1919, kept its record for the season unblemished by defeating Iowa, 7 to 0, in a spectacular game today.

The Milwaukee team, which so far has been undefeated, presented a varied attack which finally wore down Iowa. The single score came as the result of a forward pass to the Hawkeye 1-yard line and a drive by Ronzani, right half back.

Iowa, though outplayed most of the time, had one chance to make a touchdown in the second period, when a fumble surrendered the ball on the Marquette 2-yard line. Sansen, replacing Kriz at full back, plowed through to within an inch of the goal. There Marquette held, and took the ball on downs.

Penalties for both teams were frequent.

The statistics showed Marquette's edge. The Hilltoppers had eleven first downs to eight for Iowa. In yards from scrimmage, Marquette had 138 to 95 for Iowa.

Vanderbilt Noses Out Georgia Tech, 6 to 0

Atlanta, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Vanderbilt's Commodores won their annual game with Georgia Tech here today, 6 to 0, in a contest marked by frequent fumbles, wild passing and hard-line play. Vanderbilt scored its single touchdown early in the second period as Askew scooted around left end for 20 yards after snatching a lateral pass from Thomas. Schwartz missed his placement kick for the extra point.

On several occasions Vanderbilt was in scoring position by virtue of the fumbles, but could not muster the necessary drive to punch over another touchdown.

N. Y. U. EDGED OUT, 7-6, BY GEORGIA

Bulldogs Score With Pass to Win in Last Quarter.

By TED VOSBURGH.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Georgia's smooth-working football team held its place among the country's great unbeaten machines this afternoon by gaining a well-earned victory over New York University by the narrow margin of 7 to 6.

The white-jerseyed Southerners, well-drilled in Notre Dame's tricky shift plays by the young coach, Harry Mehre, outplayed the violet-garbed New York eleven throughout most of the game but barely held off a great closing bid in which four desperate passes by the home team clicked for long gains.

Intercepted Pass Robs N. Y. U. Of Victory.

With the ball on the Georgia 17-yard line and only 20 seconds left to play, Jim Tanguay hurled a flat pass in a final bid for victory, but Jack Roberts, Georgia's great high-scoring full back, intercepted the ball on his own 2-yard line, and a highly exciting game ended an instant later. Forty-two thousand saw the game.

Georgia came from behind like a team of champions to win with a touchdown and extra point in the third period after N. Y. U. had tallied a touchdown in the second. Both scores were made by the aerial route.

It was one of the Violet's rare passes, from Joe Lamark to Mugret, left end, that broke the ice with the first touchdown; the pass covered the final 16 yards of a march from midfield. Bob McNamara's placement kick for the extra point went wide.

Coming back strongly in this session, Georgia missed a touchdown in heart-breaking fashion. Roberts and the sturdy guards, Leathers and Maddox, had been kept on the bench until the second quarter but with them in action the Georgia team began to go places.

Downes-Moffett Winning Georgia Combination.

Largely through Downes' passes to Roberts and the latter's fine ball-carrying, Georgia reached N. Y. U.'s twelve-yard line just before the end of the period and Downes threw a pass over the goal line to Capt. Maffett, right end. Maffett made a spectacular leaping catch, but the pass had been a bit too far and it was caught beyond the end zone. The result was no touchdowns and N. Y. U.'s ball on its 20-yard line.

It was the same combination Downes to Moffett, that brought the winning touchdown. Taking advantage of a 15-yard penalty against N. Y. U. for illegal use of hands, Georgia completed a forward pass for a 12-yard gain to place the ball on N. Y. U.'s 10-yard line. The home team broke up a pass and stopped a plunge by Chandler but on third down Maffett made a running catch of Downes' sharp shooting peg directly on the goal line and stepped over for the touchdown.

"Catfish" Smith, Georgia's famous end, then booted the ball over the bar to clinch a 7 to 6 decision.

The victory evened matters for N. Y. U.'s defeat of Georgia a year ago and marked the second defeat for the New Yorkers this season.

C. U. ROUTS AMERICAN U. FOR FIRST VICTORY, 60-0

Whelan Star In One-Sided Contest

Weakened Eagles Are No Match for Cardinals.

Long Runs and Passes Lead to Stream of Touchdowns.

By BOB CONSIDINE.

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY stoned in some measure for a season of six straight defeats yesterday when it annihilated American University, 60 to 0, in a game which simultaneous with the opening whistle developed into a cross-country race for the rugged C. U. backs. It was American's final game of the year. About 1,000 fans witnessed the proceedings.

Two complete Cardinal teams showed a fine brand of offensive football, the edge of which was taken off only by the poor play of the injury-ridden Eagles. In their last tussle the Eagles met a foe more than eager to win.

Tom Whelan, a big shifty back for Catholic, came into his own after a mediocre performance all season, riding on the crest of C. U.'s avalanche. It was Whelar who shortly after the opening kick-off started the flood of touchdowns which swept over American's goal throughout the game. The big Celt cut through American's left tackle, switched and ran far out to the right in a 40-yard sprint to the goal.

Cardinal Backs
In Form.

There was no stopping the Cardinal backs after this early scoring. Whelan added two more goals to his credit before the polls were closed.

American lacked punch all afternoon, scoring but two first downs during the entire fray. The Eagles never approached nearer than the 38-yard line and at no time threatened. Fuschle's booting and the offensive work of diminutive George Borsari were all that American showed in the line of attack.

Catholic U., deprived so long of victory, fought viciously even after an enormous lead had been piled up. Leading at 34-0 at the half, the Cardinals' line plunging seemed to take on added thrust in the last semester.

Whelan lost little time in giving Catholic a two-touchdown margin early in the first quarter. Following at the heelsof perfect interference, Whelan cleared American's line with the ball on Catholic's 27-yard line and outstepped the enemy for a 73-yard race to the touchdown. DeMello made his second successful placement.

DeMello carried the ball to a touchdown in two tries later in the first chapter. He returned Fuschle's punt 50 yards to American's 25, then on a fake shift squirmed through American's secondary men for the touchdown. Whelan's pass failed.

Whelan Runs 80 Yards
To Score.

Whelan took Fuschle's 50-yard kick, which opened second quarter, on his 20-yard line, and sprinted 80 yards through the entire team for the touchdown. Whelan kicked. Billenger added another counter in this period, when he intercepted a pass from Fuschle and ran 25 yards to a touchdown. Blasi kicked.

Felix Ferris, Catholic end, piled up the winning margin further at the outset of the third period, when he broke through the line, snatched a lateral pass and ran 20 yards unmolested to the six-pointer. He kicked the goal also. Sheary scored shortly afterward after a 60-yard run after taking Fuschle's punt on his own 40-yard line. Ferris missed.

Johnny Oliver, injured C. U. regular, was put in at the outset of the last quarter, and soon made the fact known. He nicked American's left tackle for 20 yards for a gain that put the ball on the Eagles' 20-yard line, but here C. U. fumbled. Oliver ran back Fuschle's punt 35 yards to American's 25-yard line, then passed well to Guarneri for the touchdown. Oliver added the extra point.

Catholic's final marker came shortly before activities ceased when Guarneri tossed a 43-yard pass to Fratz, who stepped a few yards more for the touchdown.

St. John's Frosh Win From C. U. Cubs, 20-0

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Nov. 8.—The Catholic U. freshmen football team was defeated here today by the St. John's Freshmen, 20 to 0. The game was a hard fought affair with St. John's gaining the advantage by taking to the air to score. Twice in the second period, Dick Watson, former Calvert Hall speed bug, caught Carl MacCartee's passes to score, while in the final period MacCartee intercepted an enemy toss to race 50 yards for the final score.

Both teams exhibited powerful defenses but the weakness of the visitors on forward passes told the tale. Watson and MacCartee starred for the locals, while Macveon played well for C. U.

W. & L. FROSH DEFEAT OLD LINE CUBS

Little Generals Score Game's Only Touchdown Near End.

WASHINGTON AND LEE'S freshmen football eleven triumphed over University of Maryland's yearling gridders, 6 to 0, in a hard-fought struggle at College Park yesterday morning. The game was the opening attraction of the Old Liners' Homecoming Day program and drew a generous crowd.

The Generals scored the only touchdown of the game in the final quarter with only five minutes to play. With the ball on their own 45-yard line, Allman, full back, threw a long forward pass to Mosovitch, left end, who gathered it in on the 20-yard stripe and ran the remaining distance for the touchdown. An attempted pass, Allman to Mosovitch, for the extra point was blocked.

Both Teams Threaten
In First Half.

Both teams threatened once in the first half, the Generals making their bid in the initial quarter and the Old Liners in the second.

W. and L. after a sustained drive down the field, was held for downs on the 5-yard line, while Maryland could not pierce beyond the visitors' 15-yard mark in the second quarter.

The third period saw neither team able to gain consistently, play being for the most part in midfield.

The Old Liners, led by Sothoron, who galloped 40 yards around left end, reached the visitors' 8-yard line in the final quarter, but the Generals braced and held for downs.

Official Too Strict; Staunton Team Quits

Special to the Washington Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 8.—With the score standing 12 to 7 in favor of Lane High School, Coach Llewellyn, of the school for the deaf and blind, Staunton, withdrew his team from the field midway the final period of today's game on the grounds that the head linesman was watching his players too closely. His action followed the infliction of a 5-yard penalty for offside.

Roop scored for the mutes in the first period, following a 80-yard drive. Lane pushed over two touchdowns in the second quarter, Yuter making the first on a 20-yard dash and a pass, Murray to Fitzhugh, yielding the second. The visitors were outplayed in the second half, the game ending with the ball in Lane's possession on Staunton's 30-yard line.

Texas Stages Rally To Beat Baylor, 14-0

Waco, Tex., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Held scoreless for a half by a fighting Baylor eleven, the University of Texas had enough power in the third and fourth periods to score two touchdowns and win their important Southwest Conference melee here today, 14 to 0.

Had it not been for the splendid kicking of little Jake Wilson, Baylor quarter back, the steers probably would have piled up a larger score.

Texas struck first midway of the third period, when Koy shot a short underhand pass to Stafford, big sophomore, half back, who tore through the BBaylor secondary behind clock-like blocking and sprinted 53 yards for a touchdown. Blanton kicked the point.

In the final period a substitute Texas back field marched half the length of the field for a touchdown through the tired Baylor line. Clewis slipped over for the score, standing up, and Perkins made good the extra point.

V. P. I. DOWNS VIRGINIA, 34 TO 13

Tech Backs Pile Up Score After Count Is Tied at Half, 13-13.

Special to The Washington Post.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Nov. 8.—After battling Virginia to a 13-13 deadlock in the first half, Virginia Polytechnic Institute galloped behind an aggressive line to a smashing triumph in the second half for a 34-to-13 homecoming victory here today. Long runs and beautiful punting by Bird Hooper, captain of the Gobblers, tore Virginia to shreds and registered two touchdowns in the third period and one in the fourth.

While Hardwick, fleet junior, circled the ends, Hooper, Owens and Howard raced for a total of 20 first downs through the line. Virginia gained a total of 81 yards from scrimmage and V. P. I. totaled 520.

Virginia scored early. Thomas slipped through tackle for a first down on Virginia's 35-yard line, then dropped back and passed to Bryant, who raced 50 yards to score. Bryant kicked goal. V. P. I. came back with a vicious drive to sweep 50 yards for a touchdown. Capt. Hooper returned the kickoff 45 yards to midfield, then shot through tackle to the 40. Hardwick, Howard and Owens carried to the 5-yard mark in a steady drive. Hooper dropped back and passed to Seamon, sophomore end, for the score. Hooper kicked goal.

Steady Advance Ends
In Score.

The Gobblers rang up another a moment later with another steady drive that advanced half the field, Owens going over center to score, but try for point failed. The Cavaliers came back with a 70-yard advance, Hippley driving off tackle from the 4-yard line on fourth down. Try for point was wide as the half ended in a 13-13 deadlock.

V. P. I. uncorked another scoring march as second half opened. Hooper raced 30 yards to Virginia's 35 after Tech took the ball on downs and Owens and Hooper planted the oval on the Cavalier 7. Hooper drove through tackle to score and added the point, Virginia punted and the Gobblers drove irresistibly for 60 yards to the goal, Owens going through tackle to score and again adding the point to give V. P. I. a 27-to-13 lead.

V. P. I. missed another score when Hooper fumbled on Virginia's 1-yard mark, but the Gobblers came back to sweep 65 yards without a hitch, Hooper going 1 yard through guard to score. Hooper added extra point.

Brill's 3 Touchdowns Cost Dad $1,000 Each

Philadelphia, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Martin Brill's gala afternoon against his former teammates at the University of Pennsylvania in the Notre Dame game turned out to be a costly entertainment for his father, J. Edward Brill, associated with the J. G. Brill Car Works of this city.

Some weeks ago Mr. Brill wrote to Marty offering him $1,000 for each touchdown he would score against Pennsylvania, Marty revealed after the game today.

Marty made three touchdowns, one after a 67-yard run and another after a 38-yard run.

ALEXANDRIA EPISCOPAL WINS, 25-0

Gooch, Brawley Star in 7th Straight Triumph.

Special to The Washington Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 8.—Virginia Episcopal School, of Lynchburg, fell before Episcopal High School by a 25 to 0 count here this afternoon on Hoxton Field in a Virginia prep school championship game.

The Maroon and Black registered its triumph, the seventh straight this season, mainly on the brilliant work of Stapleton Gooch, quarter back, and Rat Brawley, half, who divided four touchdowns between them.

Virginia Episcopal first felt the sting of Episcopal's great scoring machine in the opening period a few moments after the game opened. Gooch wound up a steady drive up the field by plunging across the line on a 2-yard effort.

Brawley Intercepts
Forward Pass.

Brawley brought Episcopal its second touchdown in the next period on a 35-yard run with a Virginia Episcopal forward pass which bore the wrong address and found its way into his arms instead of the futile grasp of Brown, visitors' left end.

Gooch romped 50 yards to a touchdown in the third quarter after a line plunge carried him past the front line, while Brawley's 10-yard plunge over the line in the final quarter closed the collecting of 8 pointers. Brawley made the extra point on a plunge.

HOWARD 6-2 VICTOROVER STATE

Taylor Makes Touchdown After Pass Paves Way.

A HUSKY Eagle eleven from North Carolina State University, Durham, was defeated yesterday by the rejuvenated Bisons of Howard University at the Howard Stadium, 6-2. Howard's touchdown, by "Red Dank" Taylor, through right tackle on a 5-yard plunge, followed a 4-yard gain by Marshall through the same territory.

A 16-yard pass, Marshall to Lee, had advanced the ball from the Bison's 25-yard line to the point from which the threat was executed. A forward pass for the extra point failed.

Eagles Register Safety.

The Eagles scored a safety when Stroud kicked deep into Bison territory, Marshall touching the ball before it went into the end zone, recovering it immediately thereafter, but being thrown for the 2 points after an ineffective dash across the width of the field. Most of the passes attempted by both teams were smeared.

With the exception of Larry, who showed flashes of heady football when he came in for Taylor, the Bisons failed to play up to previous standards.

Waynesboro Tied, 0-0, By Martinsburg High

Special to The Washington Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 8.—Waynesboro, Pa., and Martinsburg High Schools battled each other to a standstill in their annual Cumberland Valley Athletic League game here this afternoon, the contest terminating in a scoreless tie. The deadlock was a serious blow to Waynesboro's title hopes and came after Martinsburg had lost five straight games.

Both teams presented almost impenetrable defenses and the game resolved itself largely into a punting duel. Waynesboro recovered one of its own punts on Martinsburg's 10-yard line in the third quarter, when a local player touched the ball, but in four downs had lost the net total of 8 yards.

William and Mary Cubs Beat V. M. I. Frosh, 6-0

Special to The Washington Post.

Lexington, Va., Nov. 8.—Two long runs in the third quarter broke up a tight game on alumni field today when the William and Mary freshman scored a lone touchdown to defeat the V. M. I. freshmen, 6 to 0. Full Back Palese, who was the best ground gainer for the Papoose all afternoon, circled end for 25 yards and on the next play Half Back Choklo slid off tackle and outran the Cadet Secondary for 51 yards and a touchdown.

The Papooses lost a chance to score in the first quarter after a 55-yard march when Palese fumbled on the 5-yards stripe. The young Cadets staged a 60-yard drive in the second period featured by Moore's line plunges and clever passes by Ward, but were stopped by the Papoose line on the 1-yard mark. Barber substitute back, stopped another Cadet threat in the same period when he intercepted a pass on his own 15-yard line.

Neither team threatened seriously at other times during the game, though William and Mary registered ten first downs to three for V. M. I. Acting Capt. Quirk Palese and Choklo starred for the visitors and McCallum, Goodwin, Straub and Moore stood out for the Cadets.

New York U.-Alabama May Play for Charity

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Efforts to match the University of Alabama's undefeated football team with New York University in a game for the benefit of the unemployed have been launched by Mayor James J. Walker, it was announced today.

N. Y. U.'s services having been placed at the disposal of the city, Mayor Walker and a committee of city officials and sports writers selected Alabama as the most desirable opponent. The mayor then telegraphed to his friend Mr. John S. Cohen, publisher of the Atlanta Journal, to inquire whether Alabama could obtain the necessary faculty and conference permission.

Should Alabama not be available, the New York Giants professional team was suggested as a possible opponent for N. Y. U.

V. M. I. BOWS, 32 TO 0, TO CLEMSON

Virginia Cadets No Match for South Carolinians.

Special to The Washington Post.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 8.—Clemson walked away with the game against the Virginia Military Institute today, winning by the score of 32 to 0. It was an easy victory for the South Carolinians, the Virginians showing little strength against the frequent rushes of the visitors.

Two touchdowns by Harvin, one in the first quarter, and one in the second quarter, accounted for 12 of the points, and Harvin kicked goal twice.

Clemson Has Big Edge
Throughout.

The second and third touchdowns also came in the second quarter, one when Jones took a pass over the Cadets' goal line, and again when Miller, a substitute quarter, made the second touchdown in his career at Clemson.

Clemson had the advantage throughout.

The Virginians appeared to lack the necessary punch, being apparently bewildered by the rushes of the visitors. They did not appear to know just what to expect and the visitors were not inclined to show them any mercy.

RINGLE STAR IN 19-0 WIN OF BLUES

Gallaudet Ace Dashes 79 Yards Against Shepherd.

By JOHN V. HINKEL.

TWO minutes at the beginning of the first half and one minute at the start of the second was all the time a well-drilled Gallaudet eleven needed in which to roll up the pair of touchdowns that sent the Shepherd College gridders back to Shepherdstown, W. Va., last night on the short end of a 13-0 score. The triumph was the fourth of the current season for the Silents, who also have lost one and tied another.

Gallaudet scored its first touchdown on the sixth play of the contest. After Ringle kicked off to Daily, Main, after making 2 yards at center, fumbled on his next try, Monaghan recovering for the Blues on Shepherd's 11-yard mark. Two line plays gained the same number of yards, and then Konrad Hokanson, stocky Gallaudet half back, cut through tackle and romped unmolested to a touchdown. He also place-kicked goal.

Ringle Runs 79 Yards
To Score.

Johnny Ringle, irked undoubtedly by being held in check the first half, provided the outstanding feature of the game when he tallied the second Gallaudet touchdown. On the third play of the second half he burst through right tackle like a cannon shot, shook off the Shepherd secondary defense and dashed 79 yards for a score. Hokanson's attempt for the extra point was blocked.

In repulsing their visitors, Coach Teddy Hughes' players put up the best football they have exhibited to date. A well-executed attack in which lateral passes and wide sweeps around end played the most prominent part, kept the ball in Shepherd territory most of the contest.

The Silents seriously threatened to count on three other occasions. Once in the second period after Yoder had recovered a Shepherd fumble on the visitors' 21-yard line, Hokanson returned the compliment by allowing the oval to slip from his fingers when tackled hard, Hough, of the West Virginians, pouncing on it on his own 19-yard line.

Sustained Attack
Leads to Score.

A sustained Gallaudet attack carried to Shepherd's 18-yard line in the third period, only to lose its momentum when the visiting team tightened and failed to yield any more yardage. Ringle's attempted place-kick from the 22-yard mark was wide of the posts.

Ziekse's 11-yard run around end a pretty 26-yard pass, Hokanson to Ringle, put the ball within 4 yards of the Shepherd goal line in the last few seconds of play. The final gun sounded, however, before the Silents could run off another play.

Fumbling, ragged line play and poor kicking handicapped the West Virginians throughout. Lack of a scoring punch also was particularly noticeable in their play. Shepherd had the ball within Gallaudet's 20-yard line on four occasions, each time to surrender the pigskin on downs.

Blues Register
13 First Downs.

The Blues registered thirteen first downs during the engagement to eight for their guests. Shepherd attempted fifteen forward passes, completing three for a total of 21 yards. Gallaudet resorted to the aerial game only in the latter stages of the battle, realizing 86 yards on a quartet of successful tosses out of nine tries.

The offensive and defensive work of Ringle, Hokanson and Zieskie and the line play of Monaghan, Antilla and Grim featured for the Silents.

G. U.'S FROSH BEAT WEST. MD. CUBS

Lutz Stars for Young Hilltoppers in 20 to 6 Victory.

Special to The Washington Post.

WESTMINSTER, Md., Nov. 8.—The Western Maryland College Freshman Eleven, conquerors of the Navy plebes last week, were forced to bow before the superior beef and brawn of the husky freshmen aggregation of Georgetown University, 20 to 6, in a hotly contested battle here is afternoon.

Throughout the clash, Jimmie Dunn's remarkable punting and McNally's flashy running were the high lights of the baby Terrors' attack. Lutz, who was injured in the second half, was the star ball carrier for Georgetown.

Baby Terrors Lack Punch
In Pinches.

The Western Maryland freshmen were taken by surprise in the second play of the game when Gellis tore through the baby Terror line for the initial touchdown. Several times in the second half the Westminster eleven threatened to score after unleashing a flock of passes, but lacked the final punch to push the pigskin over for more than a lone touchdown.

Charlotte Hall Ties Shenandoah at 6-All

Special to The Washington Post.

Winchester, Va., Nov. 8.—In one of the most evenly fought grid games seen here in years, Charlotte Hall, Maryland, and Shenandoah Valley Academy battled to a 6-6 tie on the latter's gridiron this afternoon. Aerial attacks featured the work of the locals, while Charlotte Hall devoted most of its time to line plunges.

The Marylanders scored their lone touchdown in the third quarter, when Carrado carried the ball across after a Shenandoah punt had been blocked on the latter's 8-yard line. The Shenandoah Valley Academy boys gained their touchdown in the fourth period, when Doorman, left half back, camped on a blocked punt behind the Charlotte Hall goal line.

Perrine and Boorman worked hard for the Shenandoah team, while the work of Downs, Russello and Carrado was noteworthy for the Charlotte Hall aggregation.

CAPITAL CITY ELEVENS REACH SEMI-CLIMAX TODAY

Many Shifts In Standing Likely

Triple Tie for Unlimited Class Lead to Be Broken.

Equally Important Games in 150-Pound Class Today.

By JOHN V. HINKEL.

THE hottest Capital City Football League race in recent years will reach a semiclimax today when the leading teams in each division tangle in intersection contests, the results of which will go a long ways toward determining the ultimate champion in each class. A quartet of more interesting battles never before has been offered to league fans on the same afternoon.

One and possibly two of the three clubs now deadlocked for the top berth in the unlimited section will drop down a notch, unless a pair of tie games result, as the direct outcome of today's clashes. Mercury and Seat Pleasant, two of these teams, will meet on the Seat Pleasant field, and Brookland, the third member of this select trio, will play the fourth place Marions on the Gonzaga High School gridiron. So evenly do these clubs stack up against each other that draws in both contests would occasion but little surprise.

Leading Centennials Meet Pet Pennant.

The situation in the 150-pound section is equally as tense. The league-leading Centennials will take on the up and coming Petworth Pennants, while the Palace-D. G. S. will engage the Northern Preps. The Pennants and Palaces are tied with Del Ray for the runner-up position in the lighter division, and the Northern Preps are considered the real dark horse among the 150-pounders.

The Marions will find in Brookland one of the finest defensive clubs in the series. Any eleven which allows another to run up 23 first downs, permits this second outfit to get inside its 3-yard strip six times and yet holds this rival to a single six-pointer, boasts an exceptionally powerful defense to say the least. That is exactly what the Brooklands did last Sunday in defeating the Alpha Delta Omegas, 7-6. And incidentally, the touchdown scored by the Virginians was the first registered against the Brooklands this season.

As a defeat will mean almost the complete extinction of their championship hopes the Marions will give everything they have to gain the decision. Loose handling of the ball more than anything else contributed to their 6-0 loss at the hands of their neighborhood rival, the Quentins, last Sunday, and Coach Walter Townsend has been pushing his charges hard all week in an attempt to correct this weakness.

Frat-Saint Game Promises To Be Thriller.

A battle which should rival the other unlimited games in point of spirited playing should result from the Alpha Delta Omega-St. Stephen clash, which has been changed from the Del Ray gridiron, as previously announced, to Hoxton Field, Alexandria, starting at 2:30 o'clock. The contest will decide next weeks' occupant of the cellar berth.

The Virginians possess a stout defense but an inconsistent attack. In their quartet of league games so far the "breaks" have been decidedly against them. Potentially there is no better team in the league, but for some unexplained reason the Alexandrians have failed to click together at critical times or when team work most was needed. Coach Goldsmith has been bolstering his offense for the last week in an endeavor to develop the scoring punch, which is so sorely needed by his charges.

St. Stephen's is another outfit which has failed to display the excellent type of football which it is capable of playing. Lack of practice has handicapped the Saints, together with injuries to several star players. The Churchmen outweigh their opponents, but this advantage is equalized by the fact that they are somewhat slow and ragged in their execution of plays. The result of this game, like the other two, should remain in doubt until the final whistle.

Centennials Figure to Retain Leadership.

Judged by comparative scores, the contest between the Centennials and the Petworth Pennants on the Gonzaga Field should result in a win for the former, as the Cents walloped the Wolverines and Columbias, two outfits which previously held the Pets to tie scores. But the Pennants, like the Marions, have their backs to the wall and determined to trounce their rivals, something which no other team has been able to do this season.

The Petworths last Sunday surprised by beating the hitherto undefeated Del Rays. Using this result as a criterion, the Cents will have their work cut out for them today if they hope to repeat their last fall's 13-6 triumph over the Pets. Both coaches are standing pat on the line-ups which carried them to victory last week.

A revamped Brentwood Hawk team will oppose the slipping Wolverines on the Mount Rainier Field. The Hawks are greatly benefited by two full weeks of practice for the game, inasmuch as they drew a bye last Sunday. Coach Hogan has made several important changes in his first string line-up and feels satisfied that the combination he will send into tomorrow's battle is the strongest which has represented the Brentwoods all season.

Coach Rice's Wolves took a 26-6 lacing from the Columbias last Sunday, largely because their air defenses failed to withstand the barrage of passes the Northeasters shot all over the field. These defenses, however, have been strengthened materially during the past week, and the Southeast players hope to do a little scoring on their own account this afternoon via the aerial route.

Columbias-Del Rays Plan Aerial Duel.

Forward passes are expected to darken the sky when the Columbias and Del Rays tangle on the Del Ray Field, as both outfits boast exceptionally strong aerial attacks. Heartened by their victory last Sunday over the Wolverines, the Columbias will be out to repeat at the expense of their hosts. The Virginians, however, are in a vengeful mood, as their title hopes received a rude jolt last week when the Petworth Pennants beat them, 6-0.

Heretofore the Columbias have been noted as a strong defensive team. But Arthur Pierdon, new back field coach of the Northeasters, and Head Coach Pettit, have succeeded in effecting a transformation from a lackadaisical offense to one which now ranks with the best of any team in the section.

The Del Rays, if they hope to remain in the championship swim, must win today. As part of their effort to defeat the invaders, they have added several new plays built around Lunsford, Nixon and M. Frinks, star ball carriers, to their offensive repertoire.

REPRESENT SEAT PLEASANT FIREMEN IN CAPITAL CITY LEAGUE

C. eleven on the Seat Pleasant gridiron at 2:30 o'clock. Members of the teams pictured above are: Front row, left to right—W. L. Hodkinson, Paul Kraft, J. Deavers, S. Phelps (mascot), P. Eggleston, C. Butler, G. King. Center row—L. Nelson, W. Norris, R. Carrick, J. Butler, O. Heflin, E. Radtke, R. Brown. Back row—Cy Ball, J. Miles, B. Hensley, J. Sims, A. Duvall, G. W. Woodward, J. PALACE AND PREPMEN CLASH

Ardent League Rivals Meet Today at Silver Spring.

WITH their keenest rivals, the Petworth Pennants, met and defeated several weeks ago, the Northern Preps this afternoon will attempt to administer the same dose to another ardent foe, the Palace-District Grocery Stores outfit, on the Silver Spring, field starting at 2:30 o'clock.

The two clubs have been meeting since 1927 when the Northerns trounced the Southwesters, 6-0. Since then the Preps have tried to repeat on three occasions, each time being repulsed with a loss. Last season the Palaces walloped them, 12-0, and this defeat has rankled in the breasts of the Redbirds all year. This afternoon they will seek revenge.

Palace Anxious to Come Back.

Defeated 6-0 by the Centennials last Sunday, the Southwesters are anxious to prove to Capital City League fans that they are still very much in the running for the section title. Joe Perron's players feel that the only way to do this is to secure their fourth consecutive triumph over the Preps.

Judged by the showing of each team in the race so far, both appear to be very evenly matched. Offensively the Palaces appear to be slightly the strongest, while defensively the Preps are considered to have the edge. Because of the closeness of the 150-pound race, a defeat for either club will be a serious blow to its championship hopes.

Wrestling Scheduled At Strand Tuesday

The first of the elimination heavyweight wrestling cards to be presented local fans at the Strand Theater, starting next Tuesday night, will bring together John Kilonis, of Boston, and Harry Wolfe, of New York, while "Tiny" Webster, former Big Ten Conference champion, is to meet Allen Eustace, of Wakefield, Kans.

Promoter Archie Parker is also offering two other bouts in which local grapplers will be featured. "Dutch" Green, of the Mohawk Athletic Club, is to take on Charlie Nichbison, of New York, and Al Backus, instructor at the local Y. M. C. A., is carded to meet Mario Gilio. With the exception of the Green-Nicholson match, the program is practically an all-heavyweight one.

In an effort to interest the gentler sex in the sport, Promoter Parker announces that all ladies accompanied by escorts will be admitted free.

D. C. GRIDMAN STARS.

Maurice McDonald, Washington boy who plays end for Mount St. Joseph's eleven of Baltimore, was the whole show in the 7-0 victory his team registered over Baltimore City College yesterday afternoon in the Monumental City. McDonald snagged a City College heave and dashed 86 yards for the only touchdown of the game. He also kicked the goal.

EXHIBITION.

Washington-Concord S. C. vs. British United, Monument Field No. 1, Leo Leckey, referee.

By RICHARD S. TENNYSON.

THE newly organized Washington-Concord Soccer Club will make its bow this afternoon on Monument Field No. 1, where the British United eleven will be met. The W.-C. Club is the only independent eleven in the city recognized by the local association.

Originally this game was scheduled for the Friendship Field, but yesterday it was decided to move it. British United was excused from its regular league game as several of the stars of the team are ailing. Jess and Reggy Burton will not be able to play until next Sunday and it is possible that Hugh Lamont will also view the game from the side lines.

Marlboro will play Gaelic-Americans on Monument Field No. 2, in the only Washington Soccer League game scheduled. Last Sunday the Irish kickers were named to play Marlboro in the Maryland town, but were unable to muster a team. Manager "Barney" Ferry expects to have a full squad out for this afternoon's match.

In the Capital City League, Fashion Shop will play Silver Spring on the latter team's field and Rockville will play Rosedale at Rockville. Neither Army nor Gaithersburg will see action as the soldiers are helping with the horse show in Madison Square Garden.

Winner Takes League Lead.

The winner of today's match between Rockville and Rosedale will take the lead in the Capital City League. The leaders, Rockville, and Gaithersburg, have 6 points each, Rosedale is next with 5. Although tied for first in points, Rockville gets the lead position as it has had but three goals scored against it to six against Gaithersburg. Both have scored seven times.

A victory for Rosedale would give it seven points to lead and no doubt the Northeast lads are going to struggle hard to top the circuit. Rockville has one of the strongest teams in its history, and to win Rosedale must do better even than last Sunday, when it defeated the leading Gaithersburg squad. Incidentally, Rosedale is the only team in the league that has not lost a game, one drawn match being the only blemish on its record.

Silver Spring, quite the reverse of Rosedale, is the only team in the Capital City League that has not won a game. However, several new players have been added during the week and better things are expected of the last-place club. It will have its hands full with Fashion Shop, who are knocking at the door of second place.

Capital City Race Is Tight.

As was predicted before the season started the Capital City League race has developed into the tightest in the history of soccer here. As no team can possibly be considered as winners, neither can any of them be considered out of the running. All of the games have been closely contested and the defeated teams have looked but a little worse than the victors each Sunday.

It certainly must be a great satisfaction to the founders of the junior circuit to observe the strides made by their brain child while the Washington Soccer League, the senior circuit of Washington, wallows in its discontent and petty scheming. If this circuit completes the season it will be a surprise to many.

Much of the credit for the progress of the Capital City League belongs to Merton Duvall, youthful president. If memory serves right, Duvall is the first American to head a local soccer league. The writer acted as president pro tem of the Washington Soccer League in 1926 at its start but surrendered the reins to an Englishman, William G. Birch, as soon as an election could be held.

Duvall Handles Office Well.

Duvall, although younger than many of the players in his circuit, is treated with all the respect and dignity of a man many years his senior. He conducts his meetings in a most business-like manner and is rapidly making the Capital City League the best disciplined circuit the game here has ever known.

Just recently he suspended five players for misconduct but in doing so he tempered discipline with wisdom by barring them from one game only. No doubt this will serve the purpose of giving the offenders a lesson but will not crush them as a long suspension could have.

The Washington Soccer League still has a chance to complete a successful season but it must soon pull itself together and decide that the real issues are those settled on the field of play where the players' ability win or lose matches rather than tricky politics. If selfish motives and personalities are not forgotten the league faces the same disaster of last year when it failed to complete its schedule.

Important Games This Week For D. C. School Elevens

THE high school series goes into its closing moments this week when two of the remaining three games will be run off at Central Stadium. The home stretch of the prep schools' season is also with us, three of the institutions being about to enter their penultimate contest.

The quest for the runner-up title among the high school elevens starts in earnest Tuesday at Central Stadium when Central High, admittedly the next to strongest team in the circuit, tackles Mike Kelley's undefeated, unscored-upon Eastern High Team. Eastern, although hailed by the press as just a shade above Business High in caliber, remains abreast of Tech itself in the league ratings, having nosed out Business and held Western scoreless.

Central Expected to Mar Eastern's Slate.

Central's only loss was to Tech, and past performances argue that Rauber's big team will pull itself up above Eastern when the two clash. Eastern is a greatly improved team since the start of the series, but the improvement has been mostly along defensive lines. And it is doubtful if Eastern's line can completely withstand the assaults of DeLisio and Pinckney.

Central will make use of its recently rearranged squad against Eastern. DeLisio and Pinckney are the veterans remaining in the back field. The line holds many new men, including Henry Gibbons, Central new stellar punter.

Another game scheduled for Tuesday will be Catholic University's frosh against the gridders from the National Training School. The game will be played on the field the Training School boys made themselves at the school on Bladensburg road.

Friday's list of battles is topped in interest by the appearance of Western in the high series against Business. Business reserve strength has been strengthened by recent acquisitions to the squad, but this does not atone for the loss of Bill Duryee, stellar full back, who will be out for the season.

Western should experience no particular trouble in winning, but the margin probably will not be great—about two touchdowns.

Friday Big Day for Prep School Gridmen.

Friday sees the prep school gridders in many important games. Orrel Mitchell's Gonzagans run into stiff competition in their outstanding game of the season when Paully Byrne's lefty St. John's Cadets are tackled. The scene of this battle is yet to be set, but efforts are being made to secure Griffith Stadium for the bout.

It looks like St. John's has a bit more strength than Gonzaga, judging from past performances. The Saints lost to Central, 7-6, and to LaSalle, 7-0, while Gonzaga was losing to Central, 12-0, and to LaSalle, 19-6.

Georgetown Prep journeys to Manassas, Va., for a match against the strong Swavely Prepmen. The potential Hilltoppers are not expected to return with a victory.

The District's two outstanding prep school teams, Devitt and Emerson, tackle real foes during the week-end. On Friday, Emerson invades Williamsburg for a match with William and Mary Frosh in what is one of the P-streeter's biggest games of the season.

Devitt goes up to New York Saturday for its game with Columbia University Freshmen. It looks like a big proposition for the local lads.

St. Alban's continues its traveling Friday when Baltimore Friends are engaged in Baltimore. Little is known of the Friends in Washington but appearances point to a St. Alban's win.

CAPITAL CITY LEADERS TO BATTLE

Seat Pleasant Plays Mercury on Maryland Gridiron.

CAPITAL City Football League fans are promised action of the liveliest sort this afternoon when Seat Pleasant and Mercurys, deadlocked at present with Brookland for first place in the unlimited section of the circuit, hook up at Boyer Stadium, Seat Pleasant, in the so-called "crucial" battle of the day's card. Hostilities will start at 2:30 o'clock.

Provided the Marions beat the Brooklands, the winner of the Seat Pleasant-Mercury game will be the sole possessor of the top berth in the section. Comparative scores give neither team the edge. Mercurys trounced the Alpha Delta Omegas, 18-0, in their inaugural contest, while the Seat Pleasants were held to a scoreless draw by the Virginians. But the Marylanders defeated the Quentins, 7-6, an outfit which previously battled the Mercurys to a 0-0 score.

Carrick Brothers Opponents.

Residents of the Maryland suburb are interested in the clash from another angle. The Carrick brothers, who live in Seat Pleasant, will oppose each other in the game. Roland will hold down one of the tackle berths for the Mercs, while Oden will be at a guard position in the home team's forward wall. Both are considered outstanding players.

Mercury stock soared slightly last night when Manager Allison announced that Acquolini and Bertonlini, star linesmen who have been out with injuries, will be able to play against the Marylanders.

Staunton Cadets Trounce Fishburne

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 8.—Staunton Military Academy ran roughshod over its ancient rival, Fishburne Military School, and defeated the latter, 39 to 0, here this afternoon. On the first play of the game McAninch raced 75 yards for a touchdown behind perfect interference.

Ward scored in the second period after a steady drive, in which Chapman figured as chief ground gainer, had advanced the ball to Fishburne's 2-yard line. Staunton's third score was registered in the next quarter by McAninch. Early in the last period a pass to Lineweaver netted 10 yards and boosted the score to 27 to 0. Minot plunged across from the 5-yard line for the fifth touchdown, and in the last few minutes Metcalf scored another after Staunton had intercepted a Fishburne pass on the latter's 20-yard line.

MOHAWKS IN PRACTICE.

The Mohawks will practice this morning on the Navy Yard Field. All players are requested to meet at the clubhouse at 10:30 o'clock.

COLUMBIAS TO MEET.

Columbia gridders will meet on the Plaza at 1 o'clock this afternoon to leave in a group for Del Ray, where the Del Rays will be played at 2:30.

RAUBER BACK IN APACHE LINE-UP

Irvington Gridmen to Battle in Stadium Clash Today.

WITH Ty Rauber at quarter back and the players available on whom they are depending to successfully defend their District championship, the Apaches expect to surprise the crack Irvington eleven, of Baltimore, in their clash today at Griffith Stadium, starting at 2:30 o'clock.

In addition to Rauber the Apaches will present Ray DuFour, former Catholic U. and Mohawk star, in their line. The appearance of this pair will add considerable strength to the Little Indians, and their followers are loudly predicting another Apache triumph in the annual classic with the Mohawks next month.

Began Career at Central.

Rauber began his football career at Central High, where he starred. He made football history at Washington and Lee, twice scoring the winning points in annual games with Maryland.

After college Rauber returned to Washington, but the fall of 1927 found the football bug biting him. He joined the Apaches as player-coach and led them to their first victory over the Mohawks and their first District title.

He has been Central High coach for the last two seasons.

A desire to play the game he loves has brought Rauber back to the gridiron.

Coach Jerry Carroll, aided by Rauber, has spent a busy week with the Apaches in preparation for the Irvington contest. The Little Indians are particularly anxious to win by a decisive score inasmuch as the Mohawks were held to a scoreless tie by the Baltimoreans.

Irvington's Passing Respected.

Irvington's brilliant passing game, which featured its appearances here last season, did not function in the Mohawk game. The Apaches are aware, however, that the visitors have had several contests since that fray and have scored on each occasion. Irvington, like the Apaches, has added strength since its battle with the Hawks, having signed Nate Weinstock, former Western Maryland line star, who played twice against the Mohawks this season with the Lansdowne Club.

College Sports Lose In Public Interest

Chicago, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Public interest in intercollegiate athletics is waning so rapidly that the time may be near for restriction of its field, President Edward C. Elliott of Purdue told Chicago alumni at their annual banquet before the Chicago-Purdue football game last night.

"Except possibly where a championship is at stake," President Elliott said, "we may no longer count on the enthusiastic and emotional public support that we have enjoyed in the last eight years."

Sharkey Bid "Boast," Says "Pa" Stribling

Atlanta, Ga., Nov 8 (A.P.).—The Atlanta Journal today quoted Pa Stribling, father and manager of W. L. (Young) Stribling, heavyweight boxer, as saying Jack Sharkey's offer to box Stribling in a New York charity bout was "Merely an idle boast."

"When I get through laughing at Sharkey's little joke—that fighting for nothing business—why, I'll consider a fight with him," Pa was quoted as commenting.

He returned here today from Chicago with the announcement that he had agreed for his son to fight in Chicago next month with Tuffy Griffiths or Paulino Uzcudun as probable opponents.

AL BROWN WINS FIGHT.

Paris, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Panama Al Brown, recognized in some parts of the United States and Europe as the bantamweight champion, went out of his class tonight to defeat Nick Bensa, French featherweight title holder, in a ten-round bout. Brown won every round except the second. Brown weighed 121, Bensa 125.

BATTLE TO 0-0 TIE

Springfield, Ohio, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Wittenberg College and Oglethorpe battled to a scoreless tie here today in a hitherto-contested intersectional game. Twice the Ohioans threatened to score but the final drive found them short of the goal.

OKLAHOMA AGGIES WIN.

Fayetteville, Ark., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—A powerful running attack led by Billy Bowman, Oklahoma A. and M. back field ace, resulted in a 26 to 0 defeat of Arkansas University here today. Passes to an Oklahoma pony back field also played an important part in the result.

D. C. BOXERS FIGHT AWAY.

Henry Irving, District amateur middleweight champion, and Frank Vance, both members of the Victory Post, American Legion, Boxing Team, will compete in a program of bouts next Saturday night in Cleveland.

PETS IN MEETING.

Coach Monk requests all Petworth Pennant players to meet in uniform at the Iowa Avenue Playgrounds at 11 a. m. today. The Pennants will play the Centennials on the Gonzaga Field at 1 o'clock.

MERCURYS TO MEET.

Mercury gridders will meet in their clubrooms at 10 o'clock this morning. The Mercs will oppose the Seat Pleasant at Boyer Stadium, Seat Pleasant, at 2:30 p. m. today.

MARIONS TO GATHER.

A short signal drill will be held by the Marions at 12 o'clock today in the clubrooms. Coach Townsend's outfit will stack up against the Brooklands on the Gonzaga Field three hours later.

NEW APACHE

RAY DU FOUR,
former C. U. star, who makes his debut with the Apaches against Irvington at Griffith Stadium today.

CELTIC TEAM TO BATTLE PROS

Frederick Gridmen to Invade Alexandria for Contest.

Special to The Washington Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 8.—The Frederick Pros play the St. Marys' Celtics at 2:30 o'clock today at Beggett's Park.

Four victories in five games is the impressive record compiled by the Frederick Pros and the Maryland outfit anticipates its fifth triumph of the season here. The Catonsville A. C. defeated Frederick, 7 to 0, for the aliens' only loss.

Capt. Bob Groves has gathered around him a brilliant array of Maryland stars for the battle with the Celtics, with former college and high school performers filling every position.

Coach "Rube" Hayman has his squad in tiptop shape with three practice sessions under their belts this week with a fourth scheduled for 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning. A light signal session will be held at that time.

Tony Wood, Storm, Kennedy, Howard, McMenamin, Padgett, O'Neil, Shell, Knight, Houston, Dick Allen, Douglas Crupper, Nick Colossanto, George Moore, Smiley Brown, Hayman and all his other dependables are ready for the whistle with the exception of "Bottles" Cox, wingman, who is laid up with a bruised arm.

Cox expects to get back into action with his teammates in the next game, the contest with Irvington A. C. at Baltimore just eight days off.

Lawrence "Bussey" Brenner, star baseball and basket ball player with the St. Mary's Celtics team was married to Miss Imogene Dunn, of this city this morning. The wedding was performed by the Rev. Father McFadden, of the St. Mary's Catholic Church.

The St. Mary's Lyceum Basket Ball Team is seeking games with teams in the unlimited class. Call Manager Bob Vogt at Alexandria 1498, between 6 and 7 o'clock.

line, but an offside play and a fumble saved the Titans, and the visitors did not threaten again until the final period.

The fourth period was only a few minutes old when Fordham, after an exchange of punts, got possession of the ball and took it to the Detroit 35-yard line. At that point Janis, who had replaced McMahon at Fordham right half, furnished the spark of a battering attack that carried the oval to the Titan 4-yard line. On the next play, Janis circled right end for a touchdown. Wisniewski's place kick for extra point was low.

Fordham Attack Starts Again in Fourth.

The Fordham attack got going again after the kick-off and the second touchdown came through in short order, this time on a pass from Fisher to Janis. After smothering Detroit running plays, the Fordham backs rammed their way to the Titan 34-yard line. At that point Fisher tossed the ball to Janis, who snared it on the 10-yard line and slipped across the goal line. Tracey added the extra point with a place kick.

PLAYGROUND TEAMS IN 26 EVENTS

Recreation Soccer Loop Opens; 14 Court Games.

THE busiest day of the fall program was on tap at the Municipal playgrounds yesterday when twenty-six interplayground games of soccer and basket ball were played. The boys played fourteen basket ball contests and four soccer games, while the girls were exhibiting in eight basket ball contests, six junior and two senior.

Yesterday marked the opening of the playground department's Recreation Soccer League, which went into its third season. Bloomingdale, always among the leaders in this circuit, stopped Virginia Avenue, 3 to 2, and Iowa Avenue sprang up and upset by downing Chevy Chase, 7 to 6.

The fact that many of the teams did not receive schedules in time for the games caused several postponements and these will be played at the end of the season. All teams were instructed to follow the schedule for future games.

MARYLAND ROUTS WASHINGTON-LEE

sellent blocing and interfering by the linemen, most notable of whom are the ends, Norris and Pease, and some clean, vise-like tackling by Fisher, Krajcevic and Carlisa. Among the substitutes Mitchell, who twice intercepted allen passes; Kiernan, flashy half back, and May, full back, earned considerable praise.

Gene Martin, who scored W. and L.'s lone touchdown; Faulkner, who averaged 37 yards in a fine punting exhibition, and Thibodeau and Mitchell, a pair of hard runners who would have done better with more effective interference, were outstanding for the Generals.

And while honors are being apportioned, here's one big vote for the weather man, whose cooperation was so much in evidence that one might suspect him of being a Maryland alumnae.

Following an early exchange of kicks, Maryland got the ball on its 41-yard line and drove the Generals behind their goal in less than a half-dozen plays. A 36-yard run by Poppelman, a triple pass, with Berger last handling the ball, and a forward pass, Chalmers to Berger were the feature thrusts. Chalmers place-kicked for the extra point, a job that he executed three other times in four attempts during the remainder of the game.

Two Washington and Lee fumbles, one by Collins and the other by Mitchell, paved the way for Maryland's second and third touchdowns. Poppelman scored the second on a line plunge from the 3-yard line after he and Woods had alternated with off-tackle runs from the 25-yard line.

Long Pass Scores Third Goal.

The third 6-pointer was scored lightning fast upon the recovery of Mitchell's bobble on the General 33-yard line. A long forward from Chalmers to Berger turned the trick.

Touchdown No. 4 came following the Generals' first threat which Poppelman ended on his 21-yard line by intercepting Martin's pass. The remaining 79 yards were covered in a brilliant parade despite two off-side penalties with Berger catching an 18-yard flip from Chalmers and dragging a General defender over the goal line on his back.

Poppelman, in the brightest individual feat of the afternoon accounted for the fifth touchdown. The Generals were held upon receiving the kick-off and Faulkner punted to Poppelman on the 50-yard line. The husky former Marine then straight-armed, wriggled, side-stepped and galloped through the entire visiting team to the pay-off line.

Miller Runs Way Across Line.

The second half was about evenly contested but Maryland scored again before W. and L. registered. Mitchell intercepted a pass on the General 36-yard line in the third quarter to inaugurate a running attack that stopped only when Miller rammed his way over the goal line. Kiernan's 17-yard dash featured this drive.

Washington and Lee covered 80 yards in scoring its touchdown. Late in the third quarter Williams took a pass from Martin BALTIMORE and Washington pinmen hooked up in a trio of matches last night on two local drives, with District representatives coming out on top in two of the contests.

Fountain Hams, pace-settters in the National Capital League, clinched its 10-game match with the Baltimore Recreation Happy Five on the Coliseum Alleys by running up a total of 2,909 pins to 2,866 registered by their guests. In the first five games of the match rolled last week in the Monumental City, the Hams bested the Marylanders, 3,042 to 2,968, which gives them a total winning margin of 115 pins. Manager Norman Seroth's victorious quintet was composed of Red Megaw; Ken Thorpe, Hokie Smith, Brad Mandley, and Paul Harrison. Ray Von Dreele, ranking United States bowler, performed with the visiting team.

Jack Wolstenholme, King Pin star, took the lead at the end of the first five games of his singles match with Wesley Askew, of Baltimore, 604 to 581.

The losing Washingtonians were Howard Campbell and Bernie Frye, who bowed to George Lang and Ed Blakeney, of the Baltimore Bowling Center Quintet, in the first five games of the scheduled 10-game match, 1,191 to 1,205. Both matches were rolled on the Lucky Strike drives. The remaining games in each contest will be rolled in Baltimore next Saturday.

Bouts to Be Resumed Nov. 17 at Fort Wash.

Fort Washington will open its winter boxing shows beginning Monday, November 17, according to an announcement made yesterday by Maj. A. M. Patch, commanding officer. Shows will be conducted for the benefit of the Post Athletic Association and will be run on a weekly or semi-monthly basis, according to the interest shown.

Maj. Patch also announced the appointment of Frankie Mann, well known Washington promoter of boxing exhibitions, who has had considerable success in the past conducting exhibitions at Fort Myer and later at the Washington Barracks.

On November 17, Mann will offer as a headliner in ten rounds popular Eddie Buell and Frankie Tramberia. These lads are well matched, according to Mann, and will offer a bang-up engagement. In all, declares Mann, there will be 33 rounds of boxing. The remainder of the card will be announced shortly.

NEWS OF LATEST HAPPENINGS IN MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA

BALL, ORR TO URGE NEW HIGHWAY LINK

Arlington County Residents Want State to Start Clarendon Job.

RED CROSS APPEAL MADE

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Clarendon, Va. Tel. Clar. 509.

Construction in 1931 by the State of that portion of the John Marshall highway from Clarendon to Porter's Woods, in the vicinity of Fort Myer, where it will connect with the Lee Boulevard, will be urged before the State Highway Commission by State Senator Frank L. Ball and Arthur Orr who plan to attend the meeting of the State road body to be held at Orange, Va., on Tuesday.

"This portion of the highway," said Senator Ball, "comprising about one-half a mile, is absolutely essential to provide access to the Lee Boulevard and the New Memorial Bridge for the people of Clarendon and Ballston. Unless the road is constructed these communities will have no convenient means of reaching the new bridge. It is our purpose to request the State to include this small section of road from Clarendon to Porter's Woods in the program of highway approaches to the new bridge to be completed by the time the bridge opens next year."

Mr. Orr, who is president of the Straight-to-the-Bridge Boulevard Association, will request the commission to adopt the remainder of the direct route, which is a link of the John Marshall highway, completing the road to the Fairfax County line.

Last winter, the General Assembly gave Arlington County another eight miles of highway and it is anticipated that at this time the State will take over the balance of the Straight-to-the-Bridge route. A request to that effect has also been made to the State Highway Commission by the Arlington County Board of Supervisors.

"The call of the American Red Cross comes with a double force this year owing to the great amount of suffering because of the business depression and the drought. The need is not a faraway one but is present with us in Arlington County and the necessity for a full answer to the roll call is urgent and immediate. Of all the organizations conducting the charities of the world there is none whose effective relief covers so broad an area as that of the Red Cross. Wherever there is a need it makes a direct and effective attempt to give relief. The adequacy of that relief depends entirely upon the number of citizens who are willing to pay the modest sum necessary to become a member and the promptness with which they act in enrolling. There is not a locality in America that will not feel the need of this type of assistance during the coming winter. Fifty per cent of the funds raised locally will remain for local use. By joining in our county we can be sure that one-half of our contribution will remain for home needs and be distributed through local channels. Many have heretofore been accustomed to joining in Washington because of their employment there. This is totally unnecessary, as credit will be given at the place of employment for membership enrolled at the place of residence. I am confident that the roll call in Arlington County will show a very large increase, perhaps as much as 100 per cent, over last year. This is no time to quibble or hesitate. The call is clear to every man and woman who believes in personally aiding in the relief so necessary in our country at this period of great depression to at least contribute the sum of $1 necessary to become a member. Certainly no agency now existing can hope to render assistance comparable to that which will be extended through the American Red Cross."

Burnett Miller, of Culpeper, who is assisting Commonwealth's Attorney William C. Gloth, of Arlington County, in the attempt to remove Supervisor B. M. Hedrick, of Arlington County, was in Clarendon yesterday in conference with Mr. Gloth, but no information could be gained from either as to when argument of the case would take place.

The Eighth District graduate nurses of the State of Virginia held their quarterly meeting yesterday at the Clarendon health center, with Miss Ann Gulley, of Leesburg, Va., presiding.

Dr. P. M. Chichester, county health officer, in his address of welcome congratulated the organization for its work throughout the district. Mrs. Mae Jacobs, superintendent of public welfare in Arlington County, spoke at length on the value of cooperation between public health nurses and social workers in the state. Miss Pearl Griffith spoke on preventive orthopedic work.

The next meeting will be held at Leesburg, Va., in February.

Mrs. Arthur Orr, chairman of the committee to arrange for the annual card party of the Arlington County Civic Federation, announces that it will be given on the evening of November 17 in the Lyon Park Community House. Other members of the committee are: Mrs. J. B. Lowell, Mrs. Harry A. Fellows, Mrs. Elinor Cary, Mrs. John H. Walton, Mrs. Florence E. Cannon, Mrs. Mae E. Jacobs, and Mrs. Julian D. Simpson.

Election of officers will be the principal business to come before the meeting of the Arlington Community Library Club, to be held in the library rooms Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock.

The club announces that it will give a benefit card party on the evening of November 19 in the building near the Arlington Postoffice on Columbia Pike.

The Woman's Society of the Clarendon Baptist Church will meet at the church Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Luncheon will be served by the Elizabeth E. Wiley Circle.

After election of officers, the program will be in charge of the Clarendon Women's Christian Temperance Union.

The Matthew Fontaine Maury School Parent-Teacher Association announces that it will give a benefit card party in the Rucker Building at Clarendon Friday evening, November 19 at 8 o'clock. Mrs. J. E. Rice and Mrs. C. J. Johnson will act as hostesses.

Arlington Chapter, No. 149 United Daughters of the Confederacy, announce appointment of the following delegates to the national convention to be held at Asheville, N. C., November 18 to 21 inclusive; Mrs. Lulu M. Taylor, Mrs. Eleanor T. Hatcher, and Mrs. Eula T. Maffett, alternates are: Mrs. Margaret Myers, Mrs. Anna M. Ferguson and Mrs. DeLana Robertson.

The board of tax equalization will hold a public hearing at the courthouse Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Chairman Emery N. Hosmer states that the board has made much progress in equalising the tax assessment in the county and hopes to have its work completed by December 30.

Lieut. Col. C. A. McNeill, professor of military science and tactics and commandant of cadets at the Washington-Lee High School, announces that the following cadets were awarded scholarship fourageres for the month of October: Lieut. Joseph Strobel, Lieut. William Payne, Sergt. John Hunt, Corpl. Alvin Coppage and Privates Edward Ward and Alexander Long.

PEACE SEEN THREATENED

roundly 353,000 instead of 300,000. But behind, there are the Italian reserves, trained and armed for Mussolini's emergency in the 1940's, which run over 3,000,000.

Germany, alone of the continental powers, has been pared down to the bone in terms of military strength. The peace treaty provisions permit only 100,000 effectives in an army weakened deliberately by French diplomacy in two directions. The Reich is forbidden the directing genius of a general staff and conscription with its inevitable pool of reserves manpower.

Small Professional Armies.

Great Britain and the United States maintain small professional armies, based upon voluntary enlistment with no great reserves trained by yearly "classes" of the nation's youth called to the colors for short-term compulsory service. Britain itself boasts of but 212,000 in the active army, which is scattered from Aldershot to Singapore. The United States has even a smaller force, 137,000 only. The reserves in each case, due to the system employed, are under 300,000 men.

Were not Japan far removed from the Old World, she would play a more important part in military calculations outside those of Moscow. The Mikado's land has an equally small standing army; but unlike those of the English-speaking peoples, its basis on conscription permits it to expand rapidly into a fighting force of 2,248,000 trained soldiers.

Now Armageddon, if it threatens again, will come from the clash of these land forces when nations once more stampede from law and order. Sea power, most menacing as a head-on collision between American and Britain, has been curbed.

The London Naval Pact, extending the initial limitation of capital ships effected at the Washington Arms Conference to virtually all classes of watercraft, has fixed the gross tonnages of the two outstanding Atlantic rivals together with that of Japan across the Pacific. Unrestrained competitive building between the three countries has ceased.

For practical purposes, this means that "militarism"—is notably a problem set in the fears and ambitions of Old World nations—nations not yet able to agree upon the limitation of bloated continental armies.

The world at large, however, has to pay a heavy bill for what may be called security by means of the mailed fist. The direct cost of the world's armaments exceeds $4,000,000,000, a year—close to doubling the prewar military outlay of all the nations on earth on the eve of that fearful shot in the Balkan town of Sarajevo. Europe's share remains approximately the same for prewar and postwar totals. These 27 of the 64 states of the world shoulder about two-thirds of the financial burden of excessive armaments.

Notwithstanding the intricate detail involved, certain broad comparisons can be made. They are, however, highly qualified because there have been changes in the purchasing power of currencies and budgetary methods differ from one nation to another in the setting up of accounts.

Appropriations Increased.

1. Most of the European nations have increased their appropriations. The exceptions are the Scandinavian countries, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland and Great Britain—their index of military expenditures even registering actual decline. Germany, Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria, due to the restrictions in the peace treaties, perforce are spending the minimum.

2. The United States and Japan have led in increased expenditures outside the Old World, followed by South American countries.

3. Air power everywhere is eating up more revenue, as competition turns into this sphere of militarism.

4. Though the proportion of military charges to total budgetary expenditures appears to be less now than in 1913, the actual cash outlay is much larger for armaments.

The "armed peace" therefore takes the toll of national wealth in two ways. It leaves each generation fastened with the war debts of past military adventures, but, at the same time, it eats farther into current income for preparation to meet the emergency of future conflicts.

Yesterday, we are apt to forget, war was comparatively cheap because armies campaigned off the land. Nowadays, it is a struggle of steel and gold on a truly staggering scale.

When one "world war" ended with the Peace of Utrecht in 1715, the debts of the nations only stood at a billion and a half dollars. Even a hundred years later, at the end of the Napoleonic wars, the aggregate debts amounted only to seven billions. But the great war, opening after another century of intermittent strife, began with nations under the burden of forty-four billions. The struggle closed with the staggering total of two hundred and fifty-five billions of dollars.

For the United States, this meant that we could fight the Civil War, say, for about a million dollars a day until the crisis—which only raised expenditures to three millions. However, the World War cost the American Treasury over a million dollars an hour each 24-hour day for two years. This direct American expenditure in the European catastrophe, the War Department estimates apart from loans to the allies, "was sufficient to have carried on the Revolutionary War continually for more than a thousand years" at its easy eighteenth century gait!

Bearing Upon Civilization.

Call it "peace insurance" or anything else, war charges have a direct bearing upon civilization. This is because the income of every people to the extent that it is armed is diverted from constructive to potentially destructive purposes.

The cost of preparedness eats up the well-being of nations. Take Great Britain—by no means the heaviest armament spender. The economist, Pigou, estimates that before the war England maintained armaments that took in terms of labor "about a fortnight's work of the brain workers, hand workers, and mechanical equipment of the country."

His eminent colleague, Sir Josiah Stamp, believes that this now amounts to a month's use out of a year. The standard of living in industrial nations, he adds, could be increased by 10 per cent by the abolition of these armament charges. "At the stage at which we stand," he observes grimly, "it is for the mass of peoples of these nations the difference between grinding penury and a reasonable standard of comfort."

In other words, twelve years after the armistice, all nations are facing the necessity of choosing between the military expenses and the social expenses—the social surplus on which the cultural progress of nations depends.

Attitude of France.

Throughout these years the efforts of the League of Nations have been thwarted by the conflict of views over the way to end European militarism.

The French, very nearly bled white, have been adamant that nothing can be done until security is "secured" beyond the question of threat from any quarter. The British, equally firm, hold that until there is disarmament, there can be no security for anyone.

The Fascist supremacy, turning Italy to the recovery of her Latin prestige seemingly filched by France, has made Rome bid for Mediterranean sea power and Balkan domination. The naval rivalry with France has complicated the ultimate settlement of the limitation of the world's fleets—something of grave import when 1936 brings up the extension of existing pacts. The restless thrust of Italian ambitions across the Adriatic, using Albania as a bridgehead into the heart of a Balkanized Europe, has served to heighten France's panic over security in this quarter.

The unmistakable warning from across the Rhine, however, that Germany will not further tolerate delay in calling the world arms parley is much more direct. The threat is based upon the undisputed fact that the Treaty of Versailles reduced German armaments to the minimum for self-defense on the proposition that this would make possible similar limitation on the part of the victors—the amount of the time of the reduction to be judged, presumably by those who imposed the terms.

Berlin bluntly tells Germany's neighbors that it is time the league program passed from the preliminary sessions of the preparatory commission for the disarmament conference, now deadlocked for virtually eighteen months on the security versus disarmament issue, to a full world debate. More ominous for the French contention, Germany, though by no means underwriting Mussolini's bombshell on general revision of the peace arrangements, has the support of other vanquished nations and Soviet Russia.

Heightening Tension Cited.

Europeans are beginning to realize that the combination of armament burdens and danger spots can not be solved in terms of individually guaranteed security, even within the framework of the League of Nations. The heightening tension of the Old World, inescapably interwoven with the failure to cut off the offensive power of armaments, proves European statesmanship must make its choice in the 1930s between peace and war. This lies between the old armed camps whose appearance a generation ago presaged the World War and the newer security which rests upon defensive armaments subordinated to the public order established at Geneva.

"If Europe devoted to armaments the same percentage of its aggregate income as the U. S. A., it would be spending, not at the rate of $2,000,000,000 as at present, but something like $800,000,000," a Swedish authority points out. "That would mean universal reduction to the level of armaments now obtaining in Switzerland or Austria, or, in other words, the elimination of all aggressive elements in the defense organizations of European countries."

The correction of these ratios, then, is a world problem. Put in concrete terms, the United States has a national income which exceeds a third of the world's total income; but it accounts for approximately only one-sixth of the world armament expenditure. Europe, with over four times our American population, commands an income about equal to that of the United States; but it pays exactly four-sixths of the armament bill.

Even though the United States has surrendered the prospect of naval supremacy and accepted parity on the sea with the greatest sea power, as well as maintaining a military establishment proportionately much smaller than "disarmed" Germany, our American delegation at Geneva has in its ranks far more than observers from the New World.

We can not in dollars-and-cents terms afford the bankruptcy of European statesmanship in the arms sphere.

Half our trade is with the Old World nations. The bulk of our foreign financing lies across the Atlantic in European storm centers. Eleven billions of war debts will not be paid Washington if armaments mount further and European debtors get into a jam—a jam made in the next twelve years of Armistice Days in their accumulated futility to make mankind learn the A-B-Cs of world life.

sure to provide starting with the January shows, we will quickly leave depression behind and all be singing 'Happy Days Are Here Again.'"

"Fine stuff for a Democratic chairman to spring in the midst of a campaign!" snorted the Democratic "calamity howlers." Candidates hoping to "cash in" on the depression issue were amazed at their campaign director's frankness. "He just doesn't seem to have any political savvy at all," they said. And the howls for his resignation grew louder.

If I were a Democrat I would keep quiet and let Raskob stay on the job until he pays off the deficit.

Friday.

REPRESENTATIVE RUTH BRYAN OWEN, of Florida, daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan, has joined the "we-ought-to-have-a-law" society. The "we-ought-to-have-a-law" society consists of well-meaning folk who think whenever they get an idea it ought to be enacted into legislation. If your fireplace smokes, if your corns hurt, if you have a pain in the neck, if we lack rain, if the stock market sags, if people will persist in drinking gin, if children won't mind their parents, just pass more laws and all will be well—that is the creed of the society. Its membership embraces millions of American people. We are the greatest law enactors in the world—and the greatest law-breakers—for the simple reason that we have more laws to break than any other people.

Each new member is required to contribute an idea for another law. Mrs. Owen's contribution is a proposal "to put child and home on a parity of dignity" with agriculture, national defense and commerce. To accomplish this laudable purpose, Mrs. Owen wants to pass a law creating a new post in the President's Cabinet to "promote and foster education, home and family life and child welfare." I am told that the members of the society are so enthusiastic about Mrs. Owen's idea that they want to elect her to their board of directors, a most unusual honor to be conferred upon a new member!

I hate to be constantly throwing rocks. If the campaign weren't over perhaps I'd indorse Mrs. Owen's bill. I'm sure it would be a vote-getter. But now that I'm safely reelected I feel that I can speak my mind freely. By what weird logic does Mrs. Owen reach the conclusion that it is necessary to do anything to put child and home on "a parity of dignity" with agriculture, national defense and commerce? That, I humbly inquire, as a member of the august body which may have to pass upon Mrs. Owen's bill, could a member of the President's Cabinet do about it? I'm in favor of both "child and home" and I'm opposed to reducing them to parity with anything.

Now we know why our bootleggers were being hampered in the delivery of their wares to thirsty statesmen during the last session. Charley Curtis and Dr. Doran had agents planted in the Senate office building to spy on them.

CONTEST EXPECTED ON ELECTION RESULT

At Least Two Republicans May Demand Recount in Montgomery.

THIRD ALSO FORECAST

No definite action was taken yesterday by Montgomery County Republicans toward asking for a recount of county ballots cast in the general election Tuesday. It is expected, however, that the petition for such a recount will be filed tomorrow morning.

Individual candidates must ask the recount, alleging that they believe ballots had not been counted which should have been included. Bond to cover the cost of the recount must be filed at the same time. The candidate seeking the recount must bear the expense unless the recount develops that he has actually been elected.

It is probable that a contest will develop over the election of William Frank Ricketts, Democrat, as county commissioner of the Fourth Commissioner District. Unofficial returns had given the election to his opponent, Frank H. Karn, Republican, by a majority of 21 votes, but the official canvass revealed that Ricketts was winner by the narrow margin of 15 votes.

The election of Stedman Prescott, Democrat, as State's attorney, by a margin of 327 votes, is expected to be contested by F. Barnard Welsh, Republican. Mr. Welsh has told several persons in Rockville that he was dissatisfied with the result of the election and is expected to take the initiative in asking for a recount.

It is problematical whether Thomas M. Anderson, Republican, will file a protest against the election of Robert G. Hilton, Democrat, who was named State senator by a majority of 100 votes.

Democrats yesterday were inclined to scoff at the prospect for a recount. "They threw away more of our ballots than we did theirs," they declared. "If they can't be good sports, it doesn't cost us anything."

The Montgomery County Federation of Women's Clubs will hold its semi-annual meeting Friday at the Bethesda Presbyterian Church in Wilson lane, Bethesda. Mrs. B. Peyton Whalen will preside. Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, president of the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Rudolph S. Allen, president of the Sixth District, have been invited to speak.

Mrs. J. Somervell Dawson, chairman of the Montgomery County Chapter of the American Red Cross, and Miss Estelle T. Moore, who is in charge of the sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals, will address the meeting. The various club directors will make their reports on the progress made by their clubs in the last year. Luncheon will be served by the ladies of the church. Reservations must be received by Mrs. E. G. Bauersfield, of Bethesda, not later than Tuesday.

Dorsey Hyde, Jr., secretary of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, will address the Woman's Club of Bethesda, Tuesday afternoon at the monthly meeting of the club. Mr. Hyde will speak on "The Responsibility of the Individual to the Community." Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the club, will preside at the business meeting at 2 o'clock which will precede the address.

The Bethesda Chamber of Commerce will meet November 18 in the county building at Bethesda. The regular meeting night of the chamber coincided with election day and the meeting was postponed.

Judge Robert B. Peter in Rockville Circuit Court has refused to grant an absolute divorce to Ulysses Garrison, who alleged misconduct against his wife, Mrs. Hattie Garrison. The judge held that no evidence had been presented which would show misconduct and therefore dismissed the case.

Albert B. Watkins, of Bethesda, has filed suit for absolute divorce from Mrs. Edna B. Watkins, of Bethesda, alleging misconduct and naming a corespondent. The couple was married March 5, 1924, and has two children. The husband is represented by Attorney Kenneth Lyddane of Rockville.

Police Seeking Girl Missing From Home

Mary Bell, 15 Years Old, Is Thought to Have Gone to Richmond.

Missing since she walked out of her home at 7243 Arlington avenue in Bethesda, Md., early last night, Miss Mary Caroline Bell, 15-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon W. Bell, was being searched for by Washington police.

Fourteenth Precinct police reported that the girl recently had undergone treatment for a mental ailment at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. She was described as five feet, five inches tall, with dark hair, dark eyes. When she left home she was wearing a blue coat, a white short-sleeve dress, and no hat.

Police said they were advised by the girl's parents that they thought she was en route to Richmond, Va. No reason was given.

Four Are Hurt in Auto Crash Near Jefferson

Special to The Washington Post.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 8.—Charles Creager, 52 years old, and Gaither Ward, 22 years old, of Boyds, Montgomery County; Elmer Ward, 23 years old, of Comus, Md., and Hobart Mesaman, 22 years old, of Cumberland, are in the City Hospital with severe injuries as the result of an automobile accident on the Harpers Ferry road, three miles west of Jefferson, yesterday. Elmer Ward has a broken leg and Creager a dislocated hip, lacerations and bruises.

They were coming toward Frederick, Ward driving, when the car crashed into a truck driven by Harry S. Heskett, of Hippon, W. Va., going in the opposite direction. The automobile upset in a ditch and the occupants were thrown out. Creager and Elmer Ward will probably be in the hospital for some weeks.

ENGINEERS UNCOVER RUINS

of the commandant of the Engineers School. Col. Grant is having the architecture of the period probed to find a replica of the manor house, for no drawing of it has escaped the ravages of time. And others are engaged in looking up period furniture with which to furnish the manor.

Now this is an exquisite thing the Engineers Corps is doing, and it augurs well for its future. Having done such a good job of this first piece of archeological engineering, there are many other jobs of a similar nature waiting their attention. Who knows but that in time they will be in a position to reconstruct our past civilization.

Several Belvoirs in Region.

There are several Belvoirs in the history of Virginia and Maryland, but only one of any special significance, and that is the Fairfax manorial estate overlooking the Potomac in sight of Mount Vernon and near the beautiful Gunston Hall manor of George Mason. It occupies a high knoll immediately on the banks of the great stream, and when it was bought by Sir William Fairfax, in 1734, two years after the birth of George Washington, it was the largest and most important estate on the upper Potomac. As it is indelibly associated with the name of Washington, its story and the story of its original owners are worthy of commemorating.

Thomas Fairfax, Baron of Cameron, through his mother, who was a daughter of Lord Colepeper, inherited the whole vast country in the northern neck of Virginia, which now comprises a number of imperial counties. Lord Colepeper's agent, Robert Carter, who managed the estate, died, so when he came into possession Lord Fairfax made his cousin, William Fairfax, then residing in Massachusetts Bay colony, his agent, and William Fairfax came on to Virginia with his family, and coming in contact with some of the Washingtons, purchased from Edward Washington, who was the uncle of George Washington, the plantation which he immediately named Belvoir. It was then in Prince William County, but later became a part of Fairfax County, which was named for him.

There is much confusion in the records of this transaction and of this family. It is the consensus, however, that William Fairfax came to Virginia in 1733, purchased Belvoir in 1734, and built his manor house in 1737. One historian gives the latter date as 1739; but what are two years between historians? Lord Fairfax came over from England to visit his estate in 1739, and he established himself at Belvoir for a while, so there must have been some sort of a house there to house the old gentleman. I go for 1737.

Resided in New England.

Who drew the plans for Belvoir no one knows, but it is probable that Sir William Fairfax, who was himself highly educated and cultured, either drew them himself or brought a copy of plans with him from New England, where he had resided for sixteen years before coming to Virginia, or from old England. As it had no porches, and as its front entrance looks not unlike the front entrance of Gunston Hall, it is probably that the plans came from old England.

Wouldn't it be holty toity if the Corps of Engineers should unearth in the British Museum or the Library of Oxford a plate of the original plans? The good Dr. Goodwin, rector of Bruton Parish, who is helping young John D. Rockefeller restore Williamsburg, found such a plate—a number of them, in fact—in one of the English universities, showing the Governor's Palace and the Government House of Colonial Williamsburg. From it prints have been made and the architects are now easily restoring those very old structures.

We are not wholly in the dark as to how Belvoir looked, however, for George Washington himself wrote out at least two descriptions that have been preserved. One was in an advertisement that he sent to the Pennsylvania Gazette at Philadelphia, acting as agent for George William Fairfax, son of Sir William, offering Belvoir for rent; and the other in much the same words in a letter he wrote to some English knight who was looking for a sylvan retreat on the Potomac. Here is the advertisement:

"To be rented from year to year, or for a term of years, Belvoir, the beautiful seat of the George William Fairfax, Esq., upon the Potomac in Fairfax County, Va. The mansion is of brick, two stories high, with four convenient rooms and a central passage on the lower floor; five rooms and a large passage on the second, servants' hall and cellar below. Convenient to it are offices, stables, and coach house; adjacent is a large, well furnished garden, stored with a great variety of fruits, all in good order. Appertaining to the tract on which the house stands, and which contains 2,000 acres of land, are several valuable fisheries, and a good deal of clear land. The terms may be known of Col. Washington, who lives near the land."

Dutch Oven There.

In the excavated ruins you will now see the whole basement as it has been uncovered. Col. Schulz and his young archeologists have made out a servant's room below stairs, and also a Dutch oven, which they think was the kitchen, but the wine cellar so far has mystified them. Just see what Mr. Volstead has brought the brilliant Engineer Corps to. It took the son of a parson, who had no wine cellar, and whose lips were never soiled with demon rum, to figure out that room with its little pockets like the sections of a honeycomb. Col. Schulz swore seven great oaths that it was a chamber where Sir William kept his ammunition to fight the Indians with, and is even now turning over in his mind some scheme whereby he can discover the secret, underground passage which the family used to flee from the manor house to the fort, which must have stood in front of the manor. I hope he finds it, but I believe he will not.

Belvoir must have been a charming house to live in. The front of it faced away from the river to the south, and in the rear ran the flower garden all "stored with a great variety of fruits." It was completely surrounded with a brick wall, some 2 feet or more thick, and at either corner were small brick buildings, one evidently the office and the other probably a summer house.

Sir William, as agent for Lord Fairfax, according to one historian, built a substantial house "as a place of security for the custody of the records of the Northern Neck proprietary. This house was the land office." Now whether the land office was inside the manor house or was one of the small houses that sat at the corner of the garden, no man now knoweth.

From the advertisement quoted above it is obvious that George Washington was one of the best ad writers of his day. We shall now see, from the following, also from his pen, that he was no mean descriptive writer. It is taken from a letter to Sir John Sinclair, written December 11, 1796, while the great man was still President.

"Within full view of Mount Vernon," he writes, "separated therefrom by water only, is one of the most beautiful seats on the river for sale, but of greater magnitude than you seem to have contemplated.

"It is called Belvoir, and belonged to George William Fairfax, who, were he living, would now be Baron of Cameron, as this younger brother in this country (George William dying without issue) at present is, though he does not take upon himself the title. The seat was the above named gentleman's before he went to England, and was accommodated with very good buildings, which were burnt down soon after he left them. There are near 2,000 acres of land belonging to the tract, surrounded in a manner by water. The mansion house stood on high and commanding ground; the soil is not of the best quality; but a considerable part of it, lying level, may, with proper management, be properly cultivated. At present it belongs to Thomas Fairfax, son of Bryan Fairfax, who, as I said before, will not take upon himself the title of Baron of Cameron."

It should be stated, in dismissing the physical property itself from this writing, that the original manor house was built of brick, most of which were made on the place. Some of those used in the paving of the cellar or basement are square, evidencing the fact that they probably came from England. Some of the paving also is of stone flags, a sort of red sandstone, and from a cursory examination it looks as if many of the brick were laid in cement. The thick walls have a rather tantalizing aspect, especially those of the garden fence or wall. Why should they have been so wide across? That is one of the questions Col. Schulz is now sweating his brain over.

Walls Were Torn Down.

When the manor house burned during the Revolution the walls stood stark and gaunt, rearing their blackened forms to the sky. They were soon torn down, according to tradition, not always reliable, and carted to Alexandria, where they now rest in security in many homes that were built during the Presidency of Gen. Washington. If this story is not true, what went with those bricks?

So much for the old manor house; now what of the people who lived in it and who visited it?

Sir William Fairfax was a sailor in the royal navy, and in 1717 he went to Massachusetts and married. He had a kinsman named Capt. Fairfax, under whom he cruised the seven seas. Could that noted old Federal Seadog, Capt. Donald McNair Fairfax, of Abe Lincoln's Navy, have been a kinsman of theirs?

William Fairfax's first wife was Sarah Walker, a well-born woman, whose father was a soldier, Maj. Thomas Walker, in King George's army. Sarah died at Salem, Mass., after fourteen years of wedded felicity, and on her death bed she told her good William that she wanted him to marry Deborah Clark, her best friend. This William did, after a decent interval, and Deborah not only became the best of wives and mothers, but also a rare stepmother. She was a wonderful woman, one of the kind that New England breeds when she has a mind to. It was this Deborah Fairfax who played such a remarkable part in shaping the life of young George Washington.

By Sarah Walker there were two sons and two daughters, whom Deborah trained up from childhood. One, George William, the eldest son, was the firm friend of George Washington, though six years his senior. He succeeded his father as agent for Lord Fairfax and also to the ownership of Belvoir. As his life partner he took Sarah Cary, daughter of Col. William Cary, of Jamestown. Thomas, the second son, never married. Ann, the eldest daughter, married Lawrence Washington, the half brother of George, and the proprietor of Mount Vernon. Sarah, the youngest daughter, married Maj. John Carlyle, the merchant and banker of Alexandria.

Owned Carlyle House.

Before telling you who the second crop of children were I divert my narrative long enough to say that Maj. Carlyle was the proprietor of the celebrated Carlyle House, still standing at Alexandria; that he was the banker of the United States during Washington's first term—Father George kept some of the good things in the family, it would seem—and he was the inspiration of the old Presbyterian Meeting House, still standing in Alexandria. I have often wondered why it was that Carlyle was unmolested in the building of that church, when other dissenters were sent to jail, and why Washington subscribed so liberally to its building fund. Sarah Fairfax explains it all.

Deborah Clark had three children—Bryan Fairfax, who married, first, Elizabeth Cary, sister of Sarah; and, second, Jennie Dennison; William Henry, who died without ever marrying, and Hannah, who married Warner Washington, a cousin of George.

Now the scene is all set for the romance of Belvoir. George Washington was not only related to that household, but he almost grew up in it, and the benign Sir William and the wonderful Deborah shaped his intellect and dressed up his culture. As a boy, his father having died, he went to Mount Vernon to live with Lawrence and Ann, and as there was much going back and forth the 3 miles that separated the two estates, young George was as frequently at Belvoir as at Mount Vernon.

A letter that William Fairfax wrote Lawrence September 10, 1746, when George was 14 years of age, has been preserved. "George has been with us," it says, "and says he will be steady, and thankfully follow your advice as his best friend. I gave him his mother's letter to deliver, with a caution not to show his."

Balked by Mother.

It was Sir William who secured young George a position as midshipman in the British navy, an arrangement that Mary Ball, his mother, balked at because "several persons told her it was a bad scheme."

In two years after this incident George William Fairfax came back from England, where he had gone for his education, and being an accomplished civil engineer, he took George Washington as his pupil, and when he was 23 and the latter 16 they set out to explore and survey Lord Thomas Fairfax's vast domain. The notes that young George made while on this survey attracted the attention of the eccentric baron, and that, so far as the record shows, was the first time he ever met George. It is not true, then, that Lord Fairfax employed him to make the survey and gave him his first job. George William did that.

It was in this hospitable home that George had his noted love affair with Mary Cary, the sister of Sarah and Elizabeth. To his dear friend Robin—a personage now unknown—he wrote from Belvoir: "My residence is at present at his lordship's, where I might, was my heart disengaged, pass my time very pleasantly, as there's a very agreeable young lady lives in the same house (Col. George Fairfax's wife's sister); but as that's only adding fuel to the fire, it makes me the more uneasy, for by often and being unavoidably in company with her, revives my passion for your lowland beauty; whereas was I to live more retired from young women, I might in some measure alleviate my sorrows, by burying that chaste and trouble-some passion in the grave of oblivion."

There is a tradition in the Ambler family—Mary married Edward Ambler of Jamestown Island—that she spurned George, and happening to be in Williamsburg when he rode in there after Yorktown, she saw him and fainted. One of the Amblers told me this story just the other day, but it, too, alas, is a mere fiction, for the beautiful Mary died one year before Yorktown, as her gravestone attests, and George's journal, July 12, 1770, has this entry: "Upon my return to Dinner found Mrs. Ambler and her daughter here, who dind and went away afterwards." That love affair never scratched the surface with either.

Exchanged Visits Often.

And so it went from one flirtation to another, from Mount Vernon to Belvoir, with the intimacy growing stronger after Lawrence died and Ann and their child died, and after Sir William and Lady Deborah passed on. George William and his tribe were often at Mount Vernon, and when there was a house full of company at Mount Vernon they must needs go to Belvoir to dine and even to spend the night.

Washington's diary and letter book are filled with references to Belvoir, and from them alone could be written a book of amazing interest. As the Carlyle children grew up and passed back and forth from Alexandria to Belvoir they spent as much time at Mount Vernon as at their uncle's, and many a dance did they have at Mount Vernon. George waxing out the stately minuet with the pretty girls.

One of the great occasions was the coming of the British frigate, Boston, which dropped anchor off Belvoir, for that was also the custom house for the Potomac region, and all ships had to clear through here. The captain, Sir Thomas Adams, and his midshipmen and officers spent much time at Belvoir, and what parties they gave there and what great dinners. George records the whole "scandalous proceeding" in his journal; just a few tantalizing lines.

Led In Fox Hunts.

It was the fox hunts, however, that are oftenest noted in the journal, fox hunts led by Lord Fairfax, who found that young Maj. Washington had a better seat and a finer hunter and a swifter pack of dogs than his own, and this made a bond of intimacy between them.

Just before the Revolution George William went back to England, leaving his affairs in Col. Washington's hands. By his instruction the house was rented, and the household effects sold off by auction. Washington bought most of that fine old mahogany furniture and carried it to Mount Vernon. It later went to Arlington, when George W. P. Custis built that manor, and Mrs. Robert E. Lee inherited it.

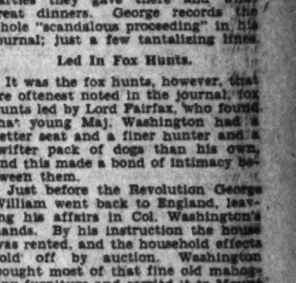
Bryan Fairfax succeeded to the estate on his brother's death, and then his son, Thomas. Washington says he never would take that title. Let us believe him. So many chroniclers say he did, and point to the fact that after the Revolution Baron of Cameron became an Episcopal clergyman and served old Christ Church at Alexandria. Bryan Fairfax did serve old Falls Church, and may have preached at Christ Church. During the days of King Edward VII, one of Bryan Fairfax's descendants, the first of the line, set claim to the title, and Edward said it was good. But he never went to England to receive the slap on the back with the king's good broadsword.

Buried Near Manor House.

Sir William Fairfax died at Belvoir and so did the lovely Lady Deborah, and were buried near the manor house. Small stones properly engraved marked their tombs. During the dreadful Secession War, when so many things sacred to the people of Virginia disappeared, those gravestones also got lost. Dr. Nevitt, of Accotink, went there after the war to view the old ruins he had so often played over as a child, and they were gone.

A few months ago Fairfax Harrison had a beautiful shaft erected over those graves, and the plot enclosed with an iron fence. On the face of the shaft are engraved the names of Sir William and Lady Deborah and of the two sons, one killed at Quebec in 1759, and the other at sea in an action with the French fleet on the Coromandel coast.

It was a great family, whose rich blue blood courses through many noble American families. Belvoir, which also is the name of Fairfax Harrison's estate in Fauquier County, was typical of the culture that made the Old Dominion and her sister States what they were.



D. C. Mother's Lucky Find

WHEN we find that some slight adjustment makes a marvelous improvement in a child we wonder why we hadn't thought before to give the child this help.

A good example is the experience of Mrs. A. G. Elsasser, 2138 F St., N. W., Washington. She says: "My little girl was doing fairly well but I noticed she didn't eat like she should and didn't seem to have much energy.

"I wanted to do something for her, and my mother recommended California Fig Syrup, so I gave her some. Jeanne improved so much I wonder why I didn't do something for her stomach and bowels before. It relieved her sluggishness, gave her a good appetite and plenty of energy.

To point up a child's appetite, increase energy and strength, assist digestion and assimilation, there's nothing more effective than pure vegetable California Fig Syrup. Doctors advise its use to open the bowels during colds and children's diseases, or whenever bad breath, coated tongue, headaches, listlessness, etc., warn of constipation.

The genuine always bears the name California. So look for that when buying. At all druggists.

NEWS AND NOTES OF SOCIETY IN SUBURBS OF WASHINGTON

Leesburg

The Presbyterian Church, Leesburg, Va., was the scene of a beautiful wedding yesterday noon, when Miss Mary Jenkins Clemens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Robert Clemens, of Leesburg, became the bride of Mr. William Edward Lynch, of Van Buren, Ark., nephew of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Powers, also of Van Buren. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. Shannon Montgomery, pastor of the church, and was preceded by an organ program of nuptial music.

The church was decorated, the chancel being banked with evergreens and potted plants and lighted with many candles.

The bride entered the church with her father, who escorted her to the altar, where he gave her in marriage. She wore a bridal gown of ivory satin, with a veil of tulle, and carried a bouquet of cream roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Emma Clemens, cousin of the bride, of Leesburg, was maid of honor and wore a pale pink dress of silk crepe, made in princess style, with a velvet hat and shoes to match, long ivory gloves and carried a bouquet of pink butterfly roses.

The bridesmaids were Miss Esther Jane Corwin, of Oswego, N. Y.; Miss Gladys Clark, of Philadelphia; Miss Mary Ellen Franklin, of Leesburg, and Miss Frances W. Stoakley, of Norfolk. All wore pink crepe shading from pale pink to deeper pink, fashioned like the maid's dress and carried pink butterfly roses.

Little Lois Clemens, cousin of the bride, was flower girl and she wore an empire frock of the palest shade of pink silk, carrying a nosegay of blue flowers and pink sweetheart rosebuds.

Mr. John W. Clemens, brother of the bride, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. Frank Stratton, of Melrose, Mass.; Mr. Alexander Wilder, of New York; Mr. Fenton Connor, of Leesburg, and Mr. William Ames, of Boston.

A wedding breakfast immediately followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents, the house being decorated with chrysanthemums and ferns, and the bridal party's table carrying out the color scheme of the bridesmaids' costumes.

A DECLARATION OF WAR.

The statement purporting to be a reassurance that the Democrats in Congress will not run amuck to the injury of American industry is signed by three lame-duck candidates for the Presidency—James M. Cox, John W. Davis and Alfred E. Smith; by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, and Representative Garner, leaders in the Senate and House, and by John J. Raskob and Jouett Shouse, chairman and director of the Democratic national committee.

Setting aside the fact that these gentlemen have no means of exercising control over the Democrats in Congress, and are, therefore, unable to guarantee that the party will cooperate to restore prosperity, the text of their statement reveals that the "reassurance" to American industry is in reality a declaration of war against industry.

While they disclaim any intention of frightening business by general tariff revision, they plainly serve notice that they favor piecemeal revision. If the Democrats in Congress do not exercise better judgment than the self-appointed spokesmen who sign this statement, the Seventy-second Congress will be notable for persistent attempts to upset the tariff structure. Every industry entitled to protection against dangerous foreign competition will be not only alarmed, but paralyzed, so that it will not dare to build up its business by enlarging factories or employing more workmen.

President Hoover may be depended upon to veto ruinous tariff bills calculated to destroy any American industry. Nevertheless, to the extent that the Democrats and insurgents can control the situation, the ruin of protected American industries is contemplated by Democratic spokesmen, including the party leaders in the Senate and House. Fortunately the enemies of the protective tariff will not command a two-thirds vote in either house. They will not be able to override a veto.

It is very unfortunate for the United States that a party antagonistic to protection of American industry should be given increased power in Congress at a time when industry languishes and unemployment is excessive. The bulwark against economic collapse in this country is the protective tariff. Other countries are suffering acutely, and some of them are collapsing into revolution and anarchy. The United States, thanks to the policy of reserving its own market for its own people, is in a position to restore good times in spite of the world depression. The new tariff bill was enacted in the nick of time, and has averted a panic. Now the Democratic leaders declare that they will do all they can to tear down this protection and open American markets to cheap foreign goods, for the sake of the consumer. What consumer? The penniless workman, thrown out of his job by the closing of a factory, would have little satisfaction in being offered cheap goods made by an underpaid workman in a foreign country.

In blind resentment against adverse conditions the voters of this country last week struck a hard blow at the political party that is preserving this country from panic. The voters have given strength to the party that would knock the props from under the industries of the United States. Now the spokesmen of that party, taking note of the quick alarm that has spread throughout the country, try to "reassure" the people that the Democratic party will not interfere with President Hoover's efforts to restore prosperity, but that, nevertheless, the foundation of prosperity, the protective tariff, will be destroyed if the Democratic party can destroy it.

A fine reassurance! A noble spirit of cooperation this, which promises to join in restoring good times by shattering every industry that depends upon the protective tariff for its existence!

The Democratic statement is a declaration of war against American industry.

CAUSE OF THE CRASH.

Out of many diagnoses of the business depression economists have arrived at the conclusion that the country produced in the years immediately preceding the crash more goods than the public could consume with its limited buying power. The resultant surplus became a drug on the market, and it was necessary to curtail production while the slack was being taken up.

Until now this has been mere theory. But figures that have just been worked out by the Census Bureau sustain the theory beyond doubt. The fact that there was an "overproduction" can no longer be questioned. But why did a surplus of goods bring hard times when thousands of people are in need of more clothes, better food, and more substantial houses, as well as the conveniences and luxuries of life?

The reason reaches far back into history. In 1849, according to figures of the Census Bureau, the manufacturing industries of the United States produced goods valued at approximately $1,000,000,000 and paid $236,755,000 in wages. Since that time both wages and the value of products have increased enormously. In 1929 the output of the manufacturing industries reached the highest point in history. Goods turned out by American plants were valued at $68,000,000,000. Had industry paid the same proportion of this return in wages as it did in 1849, wage earners would have received an aggregate of $16,000,000,000. Instead, they were paid $11,271,116,000.

Many factors, such as the cost of machinery and the greater expenses of distribution, enter into this comparison, but these figures are sufficient to contradict the popular belief that wages are high in America. On the basis of productive capacity American labor is cheap. A study of the increases in both wages and industry suggests that the working man is not yet receiving his full share of the wealth he helps to create.

A glance at the more recent figures is more convincing. During 1927 wages amounted to $10,848,802,000 and the products of the manufacturing industries were worth $62,718,347,000. Wages increased in the following two years by $422,214,000, in spite of the fact that fewer workmen were employed. But during that same period production was augmented to the extent of $5,735,139,000. In other words, labor registered a gain of 3.8 per cent in its purchasing power, while the output of industry gained more than 9 per cent.

In these figures lies the story of the industrial depression. While goods were being turned out at a pace never before equaled in history, the buying power of the public was making but small gains. When the climax was reached in the last months of 1929 a period of adversity was inevitable because the people did not have sufficient money to buy the surplus goods which they had produced.

This diagnosis having been supported by inescapable facts, the remedy becomes a matter of applying the economic law which those facts suggest. If the country is to go on producing at the 1929 level, the buying power of the people must be increased. Consuming power already exists, and it has no limitations. From the long-range view, all that is necessary to make it effective is to increase the earning power of the workman's family.

It is estimated that at least 85 per cent of all goods produced in America must be consumed by those families actually engaged in the task of production, if a surplus is to be avoided. Mass production on any other basis is impossible. When the industrial processes are speeded up by the use of machinery the income of workingmen must be sufficient to enable them to consume the surplus.

During the period while surplus goods were piling up huge dividends were going to stockholders. Had some of these extra profits been distributed to wage earners the worst effects of the depression might have been avoided. Corporations feel obligated to swell the dividends of their stockholders, but when they do so at the expense of their employes they bring disaster upon themselves.

The so-called overproduction is being corrected by depletion of the surplus and reduction of prices, but the adjustment is complicated by unemployment and lack of confidence. This method is costly in the extreme, both to industry and labor. If the fundamental relation between wages and the output of industry is impressed upon the country by this sad experience, there will be some hope of avoiding economic hills and hollows in the future.

THE FIRST FLYING SHIP.

The DO-X, giant Dornier flying boat now en route from Lake Constance to New York, is a tangible embodiment of the fantastic dreams of yesterday's visionaries. Yet, for all the novelties of design and construction employed by its makers, the DO-X is little more than an elaboration of the conventional airplane. It is not a "flying wing" in any sense of the word. It is powered by motors made in mass production by an American manufacturer. But with its control rooms, motor rooms, double decks, smoking rooms, bar, &c., it constitutes the first actual ship of the air and, as such, its flight to America commands attention.

It may be doubted that the DO-X even so much as suggests the passenger-carrying airplane of the future. Despite its great size, its radius of operation when fully loaded is limited. By reducing the complement of passengers it is possible to extend the flying radius, but even with no more than a skeleton crew aboard it is necessary to refuel at intervals in the transatlantic flight. If the airplane is to compete with existing transportation mediums in long hauls it will be necessary to combine the capacity and comfort of the DO-X with the range of the steamship or dirigible. That this may be accomplished in due time is merely suggested by Dr. Dornier's accomplishment in building a ship of the character of the DO-X. The real need is not for something radically new in the design of airplanes, but for a lighter fuel and a new kind of engine. Certainly a transportation machine can not be held commercially efficient if it must devote an excessive proportion of its lift capacity to fuel.

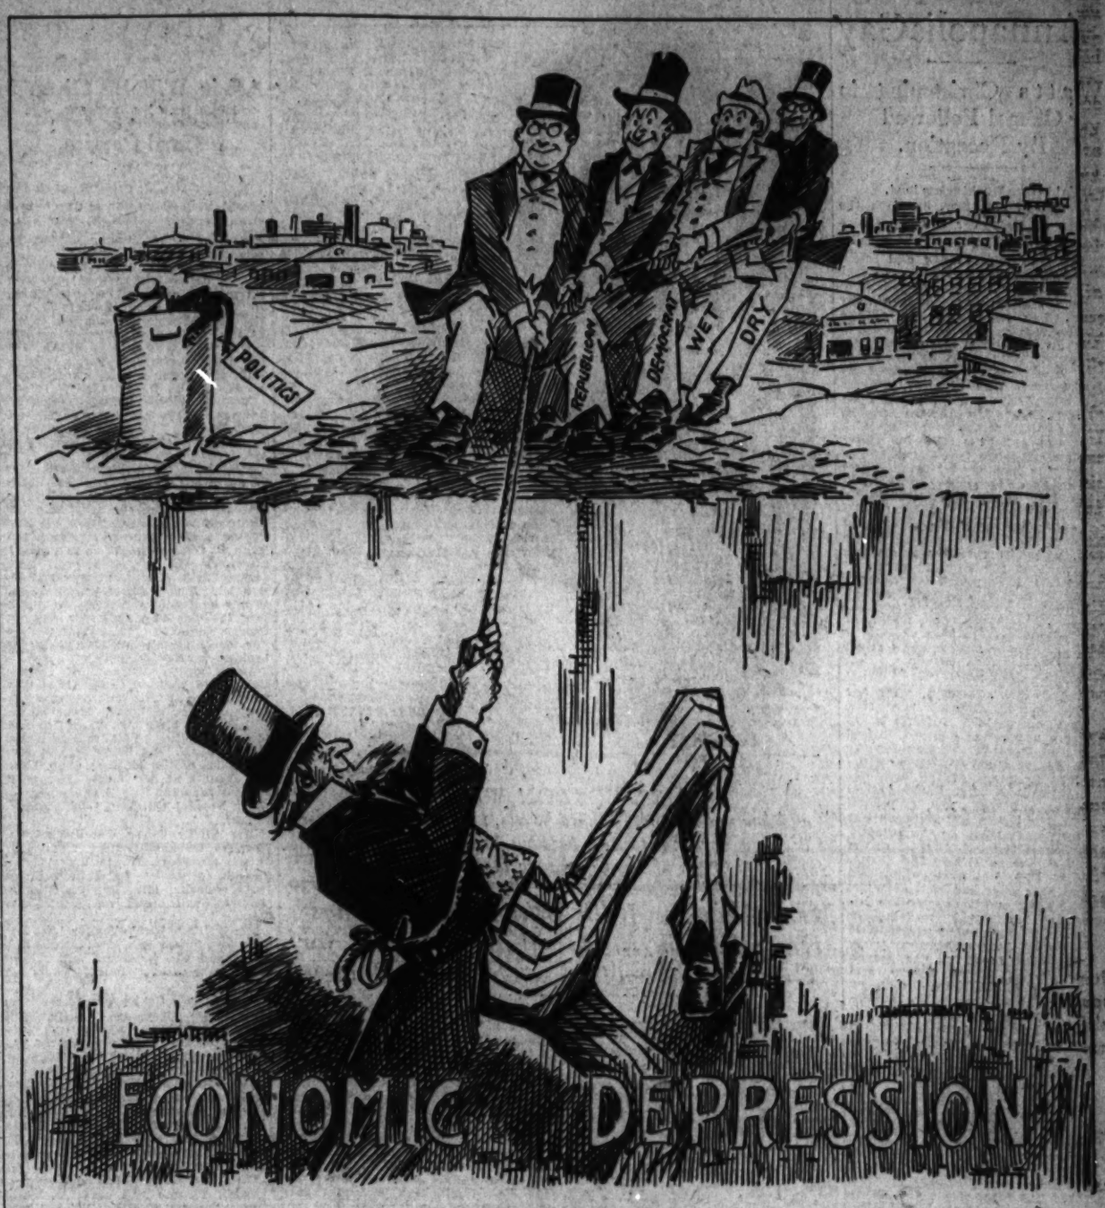
The DO-X will winter in the United States. It will be flown in all sorts of weather on various airways for the purpose of demonstrating its utility. Possibly, on certain routes, the DO-X will prove practicable. It would seem, however, that the 150-passenger plane would be useful only for long hauls, and that on short hauls a number of planes of smaller capacity would render more economical as well as more convenient service. As the first flying ship, however, the DO-X attracts world-wide interest. Just as our forefathers wondered at the spectacle of a ship of iron floating in the water, so do we wonder at the spectacle of a new kind of ship hurtling through the air at 100 miles an hour and more.

NO EXTRA JOBS HERE.

The depression and the unemployment problem are not as serious in Washington as they are in most American cities. Whether the tide of business ebbs or flows the Government continues to function, giving employment to thousands whose joint purchasing power constitutes a stable foundation for Washington prosperity.

Because of the economic stability of the National Capital it is not improbable that those adversely affected by the depression elsewhere will be attracted to Washington. Already a trek toward Washington is under way. The wide publicity that has been given to the Government's building program plays a part in influencing this movement. A rumor is going around the country that there is work in the Capital for the building trades which has induced hundreds of unemployed to make their way toward the District. Evidence to this effect is embodied in the results of a private investigation made recently in one of the missions. Of the hundred or more men spending the night there only one was a resident of the Capital. These men expected to find work on the new public buildings. They did not know, and the country at large does not know, that all the public building work is done by contract, and not by the Government itself. The contractors have their regular staffs and do not need the extra workers who are coming to this city.

Washington can take care of her own distressed. The Capital can not be expected, however, to care for a host of strangers through a long and difficult winter. While business may be better in Washington than it is elsewhere, the level nevertheless is below normal. There is no work for strangers; there is not enough to keep all Washingtonians busy. Social service agencies, labor unions and employment offices should broadcast this fact, so that workingmen will be saved the expense and disappointment of a fruitless trip to Washington.



Now Then, All Together!

WOMEN IN CONGRESS.

There is no reason for feminine politicians to be discouraged because of the treatment they received at the hands of the electorate last week. It is true that the women's delegation in Congress has been reduced and that the only attempt of a woman to gain a seat in the Senate as a candidate of a major party was a failure. But there is no indication of a revolt against petticoat politics in these facts.

If Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick had been content to seek reelection as a congresswoman she probably would have succeeded. Illinois is a Republican State, and in spite of the victory of J. Ham Lewis a majority of Republican congressmen were elected.

The feminine delegation in the House will be increased to nine members during the final session of the Seventy-first Congress. Arkansas elected Mrs. Effie Gene Wingo to succeed her late husband. She will serve his unexpired term as well as a term of her own beginning next March. When the Seventy-second Congress meets next year only six congresswomen will be seated. Mrs. McCormick gave up her seat to run for the Senate. Representative Katherine Langley, of Kentucky, was defeated. Mrs. Pearl Peden Oldfield, of Arkansas, did not seek reelection because of her conviction that the place of women is in the home. All other women candidates were reelected. Since Mrs. McCormick and Mrs. Oldfield relinquished their seats, the actual loss to the feminine cause was only one House seat. And that one loss was a result of the Democratic landslide in Kentucky.

The women who have been elected to the House have served well. Although most of them have been selected to carry on the work of their husbands, a number of women have been elected on their own records, and the States are well satisfied with their work. The number of women in Congress will, no doubt, be augmented as the years go by, but politics will remain in control of the male sex on the general principle that it is man's place to do the dirty work of the world.

RAIL VS. WATERWAY.

Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, joins the list of railroad executives opposed to the Government development of inland waterways. In a speech delivered before the Washington Board of Trade last week he said: "We may well question the propriety of Government investments of money that has been raised by taxation from all the people in facilities for carrying freight upon the inland waterways in competition with railways at rates that are in no sense remunerative. I recognize that much may be said in support of a policy whereunder the Government will spend money raised by taxation for deepening and improving rivers so that they can be made navigable. But, having done that and having made such facilities available for service practically free of cost, if private capital will not or can not operate boat lines on such waters on a basis to justify private investment, then I submit that such operation by the Government is economically unsound and can not be defended from any fair and reasonable standpoint and ought not to be continued."

Mr. Willard also is opposed to the unregulated use of highways without charge by individuals or corporations carrying freight and passengers for hire as common carriers, in competition with Government-regulated railroads. He believes that common carriers using the highways ought to be taxed in proportion to the use they make of them.

The railroads unquestionably have been seriously affected by the development of the waterways and by the ever-expanding operation of motor buses and trucks. In the 30 years preceding 1920 the freight business of the roads increased between 60 and 80 per cent each decade, but in 1929 the increase was only at the rate of 8 per cent per decade. In the 30 years preceding 1920 the increase in passenger business was greater than that of the freight business, but in the last ten years the passenger business has decreased 34 per cent. The increasing use of electric power, the expansion of pipe lines and other factors enter into the decline of the business of the railroads, but the most important factors are the bus, the motor truck and the inland waterways.

The railroads will not gain any advantage, however, by fighting waterways. So far as Mr. Willard's criticism of the Government operation of waterway carriers is concerned, he is on solid ground. But the regulation of interstate highway carriers is about to be established, and probably highway common carriers will be called upon to pay graduated taxes for the use they make of the highways. Similarly, common carriers on waterways must be regulated and taxed. The Government went into the barge line business for pioneering purposes only, as it did in the merchant marine. When the waterways lines can be operated profitably they will be turned over to private operators.

The barge lines look to the future. Right now they are not deflecting any considerable volume of traffic from the railroads, but as the country expands it may be expected that they will carry an ever-increasing volume of heavy, bulky freight that does not require express speed in delivery. As the country expands the railroads will find their business increasing proportionately. Ultimately a period will be reached when, if barge lines were not available, the railroads alone would be unable to handle the volume of traffic.

A long-range view of the vast future expansion of freight and passenger traffic in the United States ought to convince any one that the Government is fully justified in establishing barge lines, as it was justified in establishing railroads and the merchant marine. It is not justified in operating any of these services permanently.

Innumerable Fetes Keeping Annapolis Gay

Watts Christening in Chapel Followed By Reception.

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 8.—With the advent of November the social season here is gaining momentum. There were so many gay and interesting events over last week-end that no one had a breathing spell from noon Saturday until late Sunday night. The regimental hop at the Naval Academy last Saturday night drew an enormous crowd, and was the outstanding event of the week-end. The guests were received by Mrs. Snyder, wife of Capt. Charles Philip Snyder, commandant of midshipmen, and Midshipman Arthur Neves Daniels, of the first class. With every one settled snugly in winter quarters afternoon teas and at homes are coming into special favor. There were many of these parties last Saturday and many also during this week.

Chaplain Sydney K. Evans, chief of the Chaplains Corps, United States Navy, passed last week-end here as the guest of the superintendent of the Naval Academy, Rear Admiral Samuel S. Robison and Mrs. Robison. Last Sunday Admiral and Mrs. Robison gave a small luncheon for Chaplain Evans, the guests including Capt. and Mrs. Charles Philip Snyder, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Dunbar and Mr. Peter Magruder.

On Saturday afternoon, after the football game, Admiral and Mrs. Robison entertained informally at tea for a number of guests who had come over from Washington for the game. Among those present were the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics and Mrs. David Ingalls and Capt. and Mrs. John H. Towers. Mrs. Towers before her marriage last summer was Mlle. de Grandmont. Capt. Towers is assistant chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy.

Several Navy hostesses entertained at large teas after the football game, and the younger set enjoyed the informal, at the Naval Academy or Carvel Hall. The post-graduate school officers held a Halloween party last Saturday night at the Severn Country Club. Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Walden L. Ainsworth were hosts last Saturday evening at a dinner party for 24 guests, when they entertained at the Annapolis Roads Clubhouse. Among those present were Commander and Mrs. Richard M. Cooke, Capt. and Mrs. John B. Kaufman, Capt. and Mrs. Albert T. Church, Capt. and Mrs. Arthur W. Dunbar, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Frederick G Reinicke and Commander and Mrs. Bolivar Meade.

Mrs. Bowers, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Simon S. Martin, of Bonheur-on-Severn, entertained at a bridge luncheon Friday for Mrs. Winters, wife of Commander Theodore Winters, of the Navy, who is leaving for Newport after a visit here.

Charles Robert Watts, jr., infant son of Ensign and Mrs. Charles R. Watts, was baptized last Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Naval Academy Chapel. Chaplain Sydney K. Evans, chief of the Chaplains' Corps, United States Navy, came here from Washington to officiate at the christening. Miss Glyndon Hillegerst, of Baltimore, cousin of Mrs. Watts, was the baby's godmother, and Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, of Washington, its godfather. The christening was followed by a reception at the home of Ensign and Mrs. Watts.

Among the guests were Mrs. Watts' parents, Commander Bruce R. Ware, jr., of the Navy, now on duty at the Army War College in Washington, and Mrs. Ware; Commodore and Mrs. Reuben Bittler, who are at Carvel Hall; Capt. and Mrs. William L. Calhoun, Commander and Mrs. James Ware and many ensigns, midshipmen and other friends of Ensign and Mrs. Watts.

Among the gifts received by the baby was a silver cup from the class of 1907, Commander Ware's class at the Naval Academy. The little boy is the first grandson in the class of 1907. Ensign and Mrs. Watts entertained at a dinner party before the Naval Academy hop last Saturday evening, in honor of their house guests, Miss Mary Elizabeth Riddle, daughter of Capt. W. K. Riddle, now assistant commandant of the naval base in Norfolk, Va., and Miss Virginia Scoponich, of Baltimore. Other guests included Ensign and Mrs. John Zibilsky, Ensign and Mrs. Albert J. The Colonial Village

HOW welcome is the picture of crackling logs on the Colonial hearth—of flickering shadows dancing lazily on quaint hooked rugs—stealing softly over the downy coverings of high four-poster beds—creeping into the candle-lighted corners of carpeted rooms—throwing grotesque images upon stately Colonial walls. This is the glowing picture of ease and comfort reflected from the past. A picture of family life—of little tots—of home as we all dream of it. Picture, if you can, a village of such homes! Colonial Homes! Stately historical dwellings of the Colonial era. Many of them reproduced as they stood in the sainted days of Washington and Jefferson. Of such will be "The Colonial Village" of Rock Creek Park Estates. Surrounded by the primeval beauties of Rock Creek Park itself—gently rolling contours covered with towering trees—could any setting be more suggestive of quiet Colonial life than this? Here will be "The Colonial Village"—homes furnished in the true Early American manner—every dwelling representative of the Colonial period—every setting truly in harmony with the home it houses—a community worthy of being the first "Colonial Village," representative of all the Colonies, to be erected in America!

"House of Bryan" Is Still Important In Three States

Florida and Nebraska Elect Kin of Late Statesman; Nephew Fails in Minnesota.

POLITICS is a great game and as popular as the national game of baseball. With America at the bat and the four bases yawning, the side lines, last Tuesday, shouted its glee as the sport, which began with the opening of the election booths, mounted, despite the rain, to utter excitement until the gates were closed. The side lines sat up all night, chafing at the nonchalance of Kentucky, last player, and leisurely "going to bat." For second and third bases were full, and partisan politicians keyed to a state of nervousness which found little solace, on the one hand, and much comfort on the other, over the unusual activities of the "water boy," otherwise the Democratic donkey, busier than in many a long day.

And now that it is over with the donkey and the elephant comfortably glaring at each other across a bedraggled field, the country awakens to the discovery of many fine points of the game. Not the least of which is the far-flung ramifications of the house of Bryan. Not content with pitching its ball into the heart of the Gold Coast in Florida and the Corn Belt of Nebraska, the house of Bryan marches into the left flank of the great army of Scandinavians in the State of Minnesota to complete the trio of names spelling the glory of Bryan that gleamed from long, yellow election ballots. In addition to the name of the lady from Florida there was filed for candidacy to the governorship of Nebraska the name of former Gov. Charles W. Bryan, brother of the late "prince of peace and boy orator" and, like the late William Jennings Bryan, a formidable player in his own right in the pitch-and-catch game of politics in the State of Nebraska.

* * * *

ALSO in Minnesota a hearer of the Bryan cognomen turned in its crib and entered its infant cry to the din of politics when Mr. Silas M. Bryan, nephew of William Jennings Bryan, and son of Charles Bryan, scribbled baby characters over the Minnesota State ballot only to awake the next morning to defeat as candidate for the Congress from the Fifth District, a part of Minneapolis. His debut into politics was turned back by Mr. W. I. Nolan, Republican incumbent.

Submerged in the spectacular race of Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, representative of Illinois, who went down to defeat for a seat in the Senate at the hands of former Senator James Hamilton Lewis, and keyed to fever heat over the fate of the other Ruth, Representative Ruth Baker Pratt, of Nw York, who came nicely back into the fold, nobody paid much attention to the lapping of the political waves about Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, of Florida, so gentle were the winds of the Florida East Coast.

* * * *

YET Mrs. Owen's safe "home run" and recapture of her seat in the House of Representatives recalls the political lanterns that once lighted the Democratic diamond where her father, William Jennings Bryan, quondam Secretary of State, and three or four times candidate for President, ruled supreme as referee. And that the light of his power still shines in three States, scattered throughout the Union, lacks not at all in interest. Out in his home State, Nebraska, Gov. Arthur J. Weaver was swept out of office by the house of Bryan, carrying on through the political acumen of Charles Bryan. Two victories out of three proclaims the keen flair for the game of politics evidenced at least in this generation, by members of the Bryan family.

The breathless suspense occasioned by the vacillating election reports concerning the fate of Senator Thomas D. Schall, of Minnesota, who nosed in at the last minute to restore the reported flickering power of the Republicans in the upper house, will not be lessened when Congress convenes. For the game, apparently, will not be restricted to "nine innings" at any point of the session. Washington and the country at large may look forward to spirited discussion and many a "game" may be called off on account of lowering clouds.

* * * *

RETURNING for the short term which ends on March 4 next year are Mr. Dwight W. Morrow, senator-elect from New Jersey; Senator William E. Brock, of Tennessee, who stays in for the short term; Senator Charles S. Deneen, of Illinois (whose family, by the way, will be sadly missed unless they decide to move here after the senator's retirement); Senator Guy Despard Goff, of West Virginia, and Senator Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts. Senator-elect Dwight W. Morrow will take his seat on December 1 because Senator David Baird, jr., already has resigned. The coming of the Morrow family here is an interesting sidelight on the election, inasmuch as it will bring to the Capital, occasionally, Miss Elizabeth Morrow, busy most of the year with her school project in New Jersey, and also the famous Charles A. Lindberghs.

Defeat in the political race failed in its fearsome sting as regards Senator Goff and his son-in-law, Representative B. Carroll Reece, of Tennessee, the one retiring from the Senate, the other defeated for reelection, but returning to town this fall. Although Senator and Mrs. Goff have not "given out" that they will make the Capital their home little hints to that effect are flying around. And Representative Reece with his charming wife, the former Louise Goff, will, of course, be in town this session of Congress. Defeat for the Senate has not changed the plans of Mr. James Elwood Jones, who, with Mrs. Jones occupies the lovely house on Tracy place. After all, the rebound of election is nearly as exciting as the all-important Tuesday itself, as many retiring or defeated candidates elect to live here.

In the social scheme of things Washington at least will welcome many familiar faces even if the Democratic inroads in both the Senate and House promise many new figures. Among the widely known members of Congress returning, whose hospitality reckons greatly in the roster of social events through the season, will be three from New York: Representative Robert Low Bacon, Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., and Representative Parker Corning. Whether Mrs. Corning will be here much of the winter is doubtful, as her daughter, Miss Mary Parker Corning, recently made her New York debut and has decided not to come out in Washington. Which decision probably will keep both Mrs. Corning and Miss Corning in New York most of the season. Representative John Q. Tilson, of Connecticut, and Representative James M. Beck, of Pennsylvania, who, with their wives, figure largely in the whirl of society in the Capital, also will be back, as will Representative Lewis Douglas, of Arizona, whose State, as usual, went Democratic, the gubernatorial contest having been won by G. W. P. Hunt, governor for six times.

RETURNING this winter also will be several agents of the "Solid South." Senator Furnifold M. Simmons will return for the few months, but will be succeeded by Senator-elect Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina. Senator Joseph E. Ransdell, of Louisiana, will come back for the session and so will Representative Pearl Peden Oldfield, of Arkansas, who, it appears, has had enough of life on "Capitol Hill," as she was not up for reelection.

Apropos of the women's bloc in the House the retirement of Representative Oldfield, the defeat of Mrs. Katherine Langley in the Tenth Kentucky District and that of Mrs. McCormick for the Senate, thereby eliminating her, reduces their strength considerably, their numbers dropping from nine to six, three of them Republicans and three Democrats, a nice balance, particularly taking into account the fact that three are wet and three are dry. When the opening "game" is called for the Seventy-Second Congress the feminine faces will be Mrs. Ruth Baker Pratt, of New York; Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Florence P. Kahn, of California, Republicans; Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, of Florida; Mrs. Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, and Mrs. Effie Gene Wingo, of Arkansas, Democrats. Lining up on the anti-Volstead side are Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Kahn and Mrs. Pratt.

* * * *

WHETHER the two Republican representatives, one from the Empire State, the other from the Golden West, and Mrs. Norton, of the State of New Jersey, take their wet problems as seriously as the newly-elected woman legislator in Canada takes the tariff question is problematical. The first woman member of the Canadian Parliament, Miss Agnes McPhail, admits a disturbed state of mind over the existence of trade barriers between the United States and her own country, even going so far as to point out a "smoldering dislike" of the United States among people of the Dominion. This dislike, she says, has not been increased by the passage of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. Alack-a-day. Politics is a great game!

Minister of Denmark Will Retire From Service

Veteran Envoy Will Retire From Service

Constantin Brun Has Lived in Capital Many Years.

One of the most picturesque figures in diplomatic life, the Minister of Denmark, Mr. Constantin Brun, will move his lares and penates from the legation in Washington, within a short time, preparatory to retiring from diplomatic life. He will be succeeded by Mr. Otto Wadsted, a prominent official of the ministry of foreign affairs of Denmark, who has been serving as Minister to Argentina.

An appointment has been expected for some time, as Mr. Brun reached the retirement age of 70 years early in the fall. He is the veteran of diplomats, having been Minister to the United States since 1895, except for the period from 1908 to 1912, when he served as Minister to Great Britain. He entered the foreign service in 1883.

Having lived in the Capital for so many years, Mr. Brun has been considered a permanent figure in society. He has formed countless warm friendships in the most exclusive residential circles, and holds a place in the affection of his friends seldom attained by other foreign diplomats, who come and go so frequently.

Mr. Brun, so characteristic of the Scandinavian race, is a remarkably active man for his years. An inveterate walker, he is a familiar figure on the streets of Washington, where he indulges with regularity in this form of exercise.

Central High Grad Coming To Congress

Indiana, the checkerboard of State and Federal politics, will send to Washington with its contingent of Democratic congressmen, Mr. John W. Boehne, jr., of Evansville, who is no stranger to the Capital, having married a Washington girl. Mrs. Boehne is the former Miss Selma Heitmiller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Charles Heitmiller, of Washington.

The representative-elect from Evansville met Miss Heitmiller during the World War when he was detailed in Washington. The lure of a seat in the House is somewhat in the Boehne blood as the new representative's father was a member of the House from 1909 to 1913. Young Boehne, then a student at Central High School, was more engaged in those days in football than in listening to arguments on the floor of the House.

Representative-elect Boehne and Mrs. Boehne and their two young sons will visit in Washington with the latter's parents during the Christmas holidays.

Another Democrat, eastward bound from the hotbed of politics which is Indiana, is Representative-elect Samuel B. Pettengill, elected from South Bend, whose association with Washington is already established through his wife, who is a daughter of the late W. W. Campbell, who served as representative from Ohio some years ago. She lived in the Capital when she was of debutante age, and attended high school here. It is interesting to note that Mrs. Pettengill had a Republican father and now has a Democratic husband.

Mrs. R. Winston Holt and Mrs. George H. Kennedy will entertain the members of the Capt. Molly Pitcher Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, at tea at the Washington Club tomorrow afternoon. The tea will be preceded by the regular meeting of the chapter at which the guest speaker will be Mrs. Margaret Houff, of Fort Blackmore, Va. Mrs. Houff is from the Cumberland Mountain Mission and will speak on her work among the people of the southern mountains.

Envoy Totten To Visit Home In Tennessee

Diplomat to Africa Is Very Popular as a Dinner Guest.

Mr. Ralph Totten, Minister to South Africa, who has been in Washington a few days, will leave tonight for his home in Nashville, Tenn., where his mother, Mrs. James Totten, who accompanied him to America, has preceded him for a holiday from her duties as hostess in South Africa.

But hostesses in Washington may look forward to a return of Mr. Totten, who will be in town about five weeks before returning to his post. Which announcement bears a decided element of interest, for the versatile envoy is not only a born diplomat, but an extremely clever dinner companion.

Writing, both in prose and poetry, painting, riding, golfing—all these bundled into the treasure bag of hobbies—and, in addition, a flair for dressing, always in exactly the right outfit at the right time, and last, but not least, possessor of a beautiful speaking voice—Mr. Ralph Totten—bachelor and diplomat!

Apropos of the envoy's delightful voice, there is recalled the similarity in speaking tones to those of his close friend, Mr. Tracy Lay, who also was in the foreign service, but resigned a few years ago and is now living in Washington. Mr. Lay's voice and appearance are so similar to Mr. Totten's that in the old days the two men, always guests at social functions here, were taken for each other.

The Minister to South Africa is a cousin of Mr. George Oakley Totten, of Washington, and is one of the Totten family that founded the town of Tottensville on Staten Island, and aided in the defense of old Fort Totten long ago. The minister will visit his brother, Mr. Joseph Totten, in Colorado, before returning to Washington.

Resident of Charleston Entertained in Capital.

Mrs. McMahon entertained at tea in honor of her guest, who was the recipient of numerous attentions of her friends here. Mrs. Robert W. Hunter entertained at luncheon and bridge at the Kenwood Club for her, and Mrs. Eugene Hill gave a luncheon in her honor.

The Women's Guild of Wesley M. E. Church will hold its annual bazaar and dinner on November 20 and 21 from 2 to 10 o'clock.

Mrs. R. P. Martin is general chairman and Mrs. Wilbur P. Sherwood is in charge of the dinner, which will be served from 5 to 7 o'clock.

What IS THE VIENNA YOUTH MASK?

● There is no secret about it; the truth itself is so impressive. The Vienna Youth Mask stimulates the circulation, producing health as Nature herself does, through a constantly renewed blood supply. The amazing value of this treatment lies in the depth to which it penetrates, causing the blood to flow in a rich purifying stream to underlying tissues and muscles . . . charging them with new youth and vigor. Concentrated on the face and neck, it is as though electric energy were poured into your very veins. Fresh blood flushes the surfaces, carrying away impurities. The skin is cleared and brightened. Best of all, there comes an exuberant, glad-to-be-alive feeling, a freedom from fatigue that is the true measure of health. In its new "differential" form the Vienna Mask has a flexibility which makes it possible to focus treatment on one's weakest spots . . . the lines at the side of the mouth, puckery places under the eyes, sagging contours. It is as though the finger of youth touched, and revived, every spot threatened by age. But you must see for yourself. Visit Miss Arden's Salons and talk to the trained Diathermic Nurse whose whole time is devoted to work with the Mask. She will tell you in detail exactly what it has done for others . . . and what it can do for you.

Bids for Junior League Membership Extended

Junior League To Have Nine New Members

Names of Candidates Are Made Known by Leaders.

Who "made" the Junior League? This question has been uppermost in the minds of members of the younger set since the fall meeting several weeks ago. Now it can be told, for names of candidates for membership have passed the appraising eyes of members of the board, and invitations to join have been extended to those whose affiliation was desired.

The highly prized bids were extended to Miss Frances Morse, Miss Edith Grant, Miss Mary Ingraham Henry, Miss Ann Johnson, Miss Lucy Mackall, Miss Mabel Caroline Meade, Miss Mary Murray Hume, Miss Marjorie Talman and Miss Sarah Worthington.

From the ranks of the younger married set, whose members are also eligible for the league, Mrs. W. Myron Dillon, Mrs. Robert Johnston, Mrs. William Macomber and Mrs. Allan E. Smith were invited to join.

A new ruling excludes the debutantes for membership until the winter meeting. In doing so, ruling powers in the organization felt that members of the league would then have more time to acquaint themselves with the buds, among whom there are always so many newcomers to Washington. The ruling went into effect this year for the first time, so the debs will not be eligible until after Christmas.

Diplomatic buds are sadly lacking this year. There isn't one among the group. The pleasant custom of admitting daughters of foreign representatives as honorary members was instituted in the by-laws of the league several seasons ago.

Members of the group who have received invitations to join are now provisional members of the organization. After attending five lectures at various charitable centers in Washington, and reviewing two books on welfare work, they are placed on the active list, and required to do two hours work a week for any charity sponsored by the league.

Mrs. George Howland Chase 3d, president of the Junior League of Washington, will give a tea tomorrow afternoon for the new members.

Parties Are Given For Lieut. and Mrs. Dale Fisher

Lieut. and Mrs. Dale Fisher, who are in Washington as the guests of Mrs. Fisher's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Major, at their residence, 4405 Stanford street in Chevy Chase, have been the guests of honor at a number of entertainments given for them during the last fortnight.

Mrs. Lowry Coe entertained at a bridge luncheon for Mrs. Fisher on Wednesday at the Kenwood Club. Two other bridge luncheons given for Mrs. Fisher were one by Mrs. Phelps Ferris, who entertained also at the Kenwood Club and another was given for Mrs. Fisher by her sister, Mrs. Louise Humphries, at her home, 4405 Stanford street.

LEISURE AND LINGERIE INDULGE IN ELEGANCE

The Gleam of Jewels

GEMS that sparkle by night—that have the gleam of real precious stones—these are to be the jewelry of the new mode. For in an era of true feminine elegance there is no place for the bizarre and obviously imitation. Everything about our get-ups must be in keeping with that air of rich and cultivated good taste which is the essence of real, innate elegance—and nothing can more surely ruin the whole picture than the jarring accent of cheapness in its obvious form.

Imitations That Seem Real.

Naturally, we are not all graced with incomes that can cope with the purchase of real emeralds, rubies, diamonds. But this does not mean that when we buy imitations we need buy them in such ornate and ill-concealed designs that their lack of true worth is immediately made apparent.

Is it not much more subtle—and much less ready of detection—to select imitation jewelry of fine, delicate designs in which small stones are used? This is just what Paris has done, and there are necklaces, bracelets, earrings, brooches, clips and rings set in fine traceries of rhinestones, simulated sapphires and emeralds that have all the finesse of the real thing.

Little Jewelry for Day Time.

Because the newest jewelry makes use almost entirely of real—or imitated—precious stones, it is not in keeping with formal day-time occasions. At least, it is not correct in such large quantities as it is for evening! One piece, and a small one at that, is quite sufficient, and smallest and smartest of the day-time pieces is the clip pin. Worn on the shoulder of a dark dress, on the brim of a wee felt bonnet, it provides just the right amount of jeweled accent. For sports wear only are there truly "costume" pieces of jewelry—in colored galalith or prystal.

A Bridge-Luncheon

IT'S the style to entertain in one's own home and one of the pleasantest parties—and least strenuous for the hostess—is the bridge luncheon. A party of four, including the hostess, is no great affair and even eight can be managed without upsetting the whole house.

A Simple Menu the Best.

It's impossible to concentrate on a bridge game after a heavy lunch that leaves one with an overstuffed feeling. So plan a simple menu and plan to have lunch at 1 o'clock, thus leaving ample time for playing.

Start your menu with a clear consomme, a tomato juice cocktail or a fruit cup, then a light, tasty entree such as chicken a la king, creamed sweetbreads and mushrooms, a souffle or fish, such as scallops or filet of sole. One green vegetable may be served with this or, French fashion, afterwards as a separate course. A light salad may take the place of the vegetable. An ice, in individual molds, or French pastry are suitable desserts, and for a formal luncheon, after-dinner coffee is in order. Otherwise a choice of tea or coffee, one served from each end of the table by the hostess and a guest, is quite correct.

The Game and Prizes.

With eight players—and the hostess should always play—arrange the seatings so that those who were furthest apart at lunch are together at bridge. If you are playing "contract," don't have the players progress from one table to the other, as rubbers, or games, may take longer at one. Keep individual scores, partners changing at fixed intervals, and have a prize for each table.

Remember that prizes which are really useful, however small, are infinitely preferable to "gadgets"—and that ice water, plentiful cigarettes and ash trays are also appreciated!

Home Entertaining Has Its Own Fashions

Pajamas Rival Hostess Gowns in Picturesque Effects

By Lucy Park
THE FASHION COORDINATOR

New York, Nov. 8.

ONE of the most interesting phases of the fashion evolution that has led to our present state of elegance in clothes, is the fact that manners as well as modes have been affected. Dressed in charmingly feminine attire, we women must need brush up on poise and grace and little refinements so that our deportment will be in keeping with our clothes.

Home Entertaining.

All sorts of revivals are enlivening the fashion scene; shades of 1830, of 1850, of other eras of grandeur are contributing to the present state of clothes and culture. And not the least of these revivals is the return of interest in entertaining at home. It looked for a while as though the home were going to be put out of business by moving picture palaces and miniature golf courses. But—and fashion has had no little to do with this—home entertaining is becoming increasingly popular due in some measure to the alluring and romantic creations that the haute couture has provided for the hostess in her home.

The Trousered Mode.

The pajama having long since come out of the boudoir into the living room, and having gone exceedingly picturesque, is one of the delights of the hostess. In the center illustration on this page two glorified pajamas are pictured. The one at the left is of flat crepe, quite tailored in style. The wide yoke-topped trousers are a deep chartreuse with bands of orange, yellow, and brown down the sides. The coat is brown with corner incrustations. To the right is an amusing Russian pajama with a gay tunic blouse that buttons high in the neck and has great full sleeves gathered into a tight cuff.

As an alternative to the formal pajama, we have the hostess gown, it, too, a dramatic form of "dressing up" for grown-ups! In the center of the above illustration is one of the loveliest of this year's hostess creations. Distinctly Moyen age, it is made of black velvet, beautifully fitted, with a girdle of metal around the waist.

New Negligees.

Negligees and bathrobes are not unaffected by the progress of fashions. To the right on this page is a charming creation along decidedly new lines, made of turquoise blue transparent velvet. The unusual cut of the skirt, the wide sleeves and higher waistline proclaim it definitely this season. It could take its place across the tea table at a feminine "the intime." Femininity being nowhere more suited to the picture than in the moment of leisure and boudoir surroundings, it is not surprising to hear that chiffons, satins, and quantities of exquisite laces are making luscious confections for boudoirs.

Underwear Carefully Styled.

Lingerie has undergone changes as radical as those made in dresses. To the left is shown one of the new, beautifully fitted, long petticoats that mold the figure smoothly, flaring out softly at the hem. Such a garment adds not one jot to the proportions of the figure. In the same sketch is one of the shorter petticoats, similarly fitted, made of soft taffeta and lace—the very last cry from Paris, we might add.

As to nightgowns, they have captured all the style points! There are nightgowns with boleros, with trains, with godets and peplums and empire belts, with capelets, with little sleeves. The gown sketched is made of tea rose silk trimmed with ecru alencon, cut to blouse above the narrow belt, to mold the hips, to swing out at the ankles.

A corselette of lace and brocade designed for the small woman. Front and back views of a girdle of satin and elastic.

PETTICOATS

The Gay Nineties. Skirts sweeping the floor. Taffeta petticoats under them. Rustling ruffles. And history repeating itself in 1930.

Molyneux and Paquin sponsor taffeta petticoats. Changeable taffeta. Dark colors for daytime, light ones for evening. Length according to skirt lengths. The crispness of the taffeta holds skirt fulness out in proper silhouette.

Petticoats are smooth at top. Hooked plackets, gored fitting at waist replace elastic and gathers. For afternoon a single pleated ruffle, with lace at top or bottom also pleated. For evening a deep gathered ruffle. All very quaint but very practical.

DARKER HOSE

Paris says black—black—more black. Daytime and evening. Fashion adds darker stockings, the smart link between skirt and shoes. For daytime subtle, sable-like browns; Patou's new beige in deep tone. For evening, with light colors, skin tones slightly deepened. With black, off-black stockings. A gun-metal shade that has a definitely blue cast in the hand is smart. On the leg this shade assumes shadowy transparency. Very flattering, very sheer-looking. High-twist stockings combine sheerness with unusual wearing qualities. These take admirably to the new colors.

Chic Gowns for Five To Eight O'clock

THERE'S a new category of dresses designed to fill that ever-present need of the in-between, 5 to 8 o'clock kind of occasion. Last year this type of dress, for some unknown reason, earned the name of "Sunday night dresses," and having acquired such an important title, proceeded to dress up to it in fairly elaborate and fussy style.

Simplicity in New Types.

But this season, these frocks that are informally formal have taken to extremely simple, conservative lines, and they're not in the least a radical departure from the styles that we are wearing for regular afternoon or dinner parties.

The outstanding feature of them, besides their simplicity, is their skirt length. Ankle length is the rule—in other words, a point that is half way between evening length and afternoon length. The skirts are likewise very full and are particularly partial to circular fullness. This width, needless to say, flows smoothly from the waist over the hips in a long unbroken line. Hemlines are even.

The Question of Sleeves.

As to sleeves, amidst great variety there is still one dictum—and that is that entirely sleeveless versions are not to be considered. Always, there is at least a bit of something to cover the shoulders, and more often there is really a sleeve, either short or long.

Lace yokes that are extended out over the shoulders are the most successful of the shoulder coverings that dispense with sleeves. Short sleeves may be straight and fairly tight or may be puffed just a little. Long sleeves are partial to tightly fitted effects at the top, with either flowing points, medieval style below the elbow or inserted fullness of the same or a contrasting material in a little puff at the elbow.

A Word About Materials.

Black velvet, with lace trimmings, is a favorite material for these in-between gowns, and metal lames, which make up in richness of material for the simplicity of line in the dress, are very smart. Chiffon and a heavy type of chiffon called "triple chiffon," are the correct choices from the sheer family, with canton crepe that has tiny gold figures woven in it a good compromise for the half-way formality of this type of dress.

Bus Driver Turns Inventor.

London, Nov. 8.—A. E. Jackman, bus driver of Chiswick, has perfected an automobile headlight that does not dazzle. All his experimental work was done on his kitchen table, with bits of old metal and such tools as he was able to afford. The light has been tried out for more than a year, and has been pronounced successful.

Corsets Keep in Form

Half Size Foundation Garments for the Woman of Slight Stature.

IN view of the suave and molded lines of the current silhouette in outer garments, it is hardly necessary to state that in order to wear these new clothes with any sort of success, there must be the proper undergarments and correctly fitted foundation garments beneath them. Fashion calls for feminine curves, but by that is meant graceful, restrained contours. For this effect we have corsets, new and ingenious corsets, weighing next to nothing, made with light weight boning, and relying upon cut and fit rather than steels to mold the figure.

For Small Women.

Of interest are the new half-size corsets that, like half-size dresses, are reduced in careful proportion, adapted to various figures, correct in line. These are for the women of five-feet-four or less in height, for whom smaller sizes in mature dress styles have already been achieved. One such corselette is pictured in the illustration at the bottom of this page on the figure at the left.

A Girdle of New Design.

For dresses that are belted at the waistline, and the majority of them are this season, a girdle and brassiere may be worn as a variation of the corselette. A sketch of the front and back of one of the new formal day-time girdles appears on this page. A shaped band comes up an inch or two above the waistline to give support to the diaphram. Inserts of elastic in front and back insure a snug fit and ease of movement at the same time. The rest of the garment is of satin with a panel of brocaded satin down the front. A ruffle of net and lace provides a step-in, thus combining two garments in one.

A Corset Wardrobe.

Corsets, like every other item of wearing appearal, are now subject to the wardrobe idea. Three styles make a fairly comprehensive collection. For instance, there should be a girdle, either step-in or wrap-around for street wear and for sports wear. A corselette is the best investment for afternoon wear under the smartly fitted lines of the new formal day-time dresses, and of course, evening demands another corselette with low back decolletage or a carefully fitted girdle.

Arkansas Fish Center.

Stuttgart, Ark., Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Stuttgart, center of the Arkansas rice belt, also goes in for fish in a big way. The town shipped an average of 9,000 pounds a day for the first five months of 1930. Cat and buffalo fish are the principal products, taken from the White River.

NEW USES FOUND FOR HELIUM GAS

COSTLY 15 YEARS AGO

The destruction of the R-101 has intensified world interest in the mysterious gas, helium, whose natural supply is monopolized by the United States.

Identified by the spectroscope in the sun in 1868, helium was never recognized on earth until Ramsay isolated it in 1895. A laboratory curiosity costing $17,000 a cubic foot fifteen years ago, the Government now manufactures it for 2½ cents per cubic foot. From its very discovery helium has linked itself with America's destiny.

Whatever mysterious forces generate helium in the earth, the United States finds itself possessed not only of productive fields in Kansas and Texas but rich reserves in Utah and Colorado. Its lifting power is less than that of hydrogen, but its noninflammability gives it an advantage over any other balloon gas.

Unlike hydrogen, helium can be renewed and purified after use in aircraft. Thus the original supply may last indefinitely, and on this score alone Congress and the President may remain resolute in their desire to keep the military advantage on America's side. Those who belive in the helium embargo argue that a free commerce in this gas might give foreign powers permanent possession of helium reserves which could some time be directed against America. The danger of such use would be far less were helium atoms anxious to unite with other elements, as hydrogen does.

Helium Has Curative Power.

This chemical inertness, this aloofness from other substances, has made helium invaluable. It has life-saving qualities. When a diver breathes the ordinary atmosphere of 80 per cent nitrogen and 20 per cent oxygen he must rise to the surface by easy stages, sometimes requiring two hours. Otherwise, a horrible illness, the "bends" overtakes him. Nitrogen, having affinities for the blood, combines under pressure. But when the pressure is released, the Nitrogen fizzes out and causes great pain. Helium, being less soluble than nitrogen, causes slight discomfort. The modern diver's decompression chamber holds an atmosphere of helium and oxygen.

Precise experiments with laboratory animals reveal that they enjoy better health in atmospheres of oxygen mixed with helium. The application of helium to healing is under serious investigation. If benefits are demonstrated, it is possible that helium will become useful in ventilating hospitals and theaters.

The ordinary atmosphere is very destructive. It causes rust, decay and weathering, and attacks organic substances vigorously. But helium is a preserving gas that requires no refrigeration. In an atmosphere of helium, bread will remain fresh and palatable for two months. Orange juice sealed in a container of helium does not deteriorate for six months.

Commercially, what does this mean? That expensive cold storage plants, refrigerated cars and kitchens may shortly substitute helium atmospheres for ice boxes and pipes.

Even as a refrigerant helium has its uses. It has no affinity for other elements, but it absorbs and conducts heat six times more rapidly than air. Circulating through a room it chills the atmosphere at once.

Postwar exploration of the West brought new helium fields to notice. Among other things, Government geologists noted that 500,000,000 cubic feet are lost annually through vents and crevasses in surface rocks. Oklahoma overlies vast helium preserves, but the annual loss through leakage runs into millions of cubic feet.

May Find Element in Other Places.

Most of the helium wells in this country were located by hit and miss methods, but the finds have been rich. A natural gas containing 1 per cent helium has commercial value, but in Utah the Government preserve assays 7 per cent and 8 per cent at Thatcher, Colo. In the Texas Panhandle the Government leases rights on 37,727 acres and its plant there produces 1,000,000 cubic feet every month. The original helium well in this country, at Dexter, Kans., yields 2.3 per cent helium.

Outside this country the only known deposits are in Canada, where two fields, one near the Montana line and the other near Lake Erie, are known to produce helium, but not in commercial quantities. They assay eight-tenths of 1 per cent.

The history of aeronautics is strewn with the wrecks of aircraft which carried hydrogen. In 1921 the British R-38 exploded and killed 44 men. In 1928 three American racing balloons filled with hydrogen came down in flames. A hydrogen-filled ship may explode from a stray spark or from accidental rubbing of the fabric as the ship comes out of the hangar. The Graf Zeppelin has had extraordinary good fortune, due, no doubt, to the rigid enforcement of Herr Eckener's orders. But her 3,500,000 cubic feet of hydrogen are equivalent to 9 tons of potential dynamite.

The American Navy's new 6,500,000 cubic-foot dirigibles under construction at Akron will be filled with helium at a sacrifice of 17 tons in the pay load. At 60 degrees Fahrenheit and sea-level pressure the lift of 6,500,000 cubic feet of helium is 214 tons, compared with 231 tons for the same amount of hydrogen.

There is no foundation for the belief that helium is not present on other continents. A careful survey of areas exposing igneous rocks and oil-producing fields in Russia and Asia might result in the discovery of new fields.

Governor Covers Territory by Air

Eight Inhabited Islands of Hawaii Reached in This Way.

Honolulu, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Lawrence M. Judd, Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, has been dubbed "the flying governor" because he has consistently used airways by which to reach the eight inhabitated isles of the group.

Gov. Judd has been in office since July, 1929, and in that time he has been in the air some 38 hours and has flown nearly 4,000 miles. He has used both army and navy planes.

The trip by boat to Molokai, for example, takes several hours through waters so rough that only the hardiest sailors escape seasickness. But the governor makes the hop by plane in less than an hour.

Indiana Guarded Ballots.

Indianapolis, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Indiana national guardsmen rode trucks bearing official ballots for the November election from the printing establishment at Fort Wayne to the State Printing Board here.

DIAL FLASHES - - By Robert D. Heinl

UNLESS there is an eleventh hour change in schedule, Admiral of the Fleet Earl Jellicoe, who commanded the British naval forces during the war until 1916, will speak from London in a broadcast this afternoon at 5:30 p. m. over WMAL on "The Spirit of Armistice Day."

After the Battle of Jutland Lord Jellicoe headed the naval organization on land, and when the war was over he was appointed governor general of the Dominion of New Zealand.

A close associate of Calvin Coolidge was asked recently during the "Uncle Abe and David" hour, if he thought the voice of "Uncle Abe" sounded like that of the former President.

"Many have remarked that Uncle Abe talks like Mr. Coolidge," the latter's friend replied. "I think there is some resemblance but Uncle Abe's voice sounds to me more like that of former Attorney General John G. Sargent, of Vermont, who was in Mr. Coolidge's Cabinet, and is one of his closest friends."

APPROPRIATIONS for electrical transcriptions for the coming season will total a minimum of five million with a possible maximum of ten million dollars. This tremendous swing toward electrical transcription, which means that the programs are broadcast from records instead of by artists in person, is vouched for by Raymond Soat, of New York, a pioneer in developing the idea.

The big advantage in broadcasting records is, of course, that the expense of the wire toll connecting the stations is saved. Likewise such programs can be broadcast at exactly the same local time.

On a national hookup if a program is put on the air at 8 o'clock in the evening in New York, it is 7 o'clock in Chicago, 6 o'clock in Denver and so on. With a record, the program can be broadcast at 8 o'clock in each city.

"Fan mail was productive in the same amount and manner when programs were broadcast from records as accrued to network programs," Mr. Soat declared.

"The major radio stations in the United States have made a very intensive study of electrical transcriptions and have reached the conclusion that the method is not a matter of concern of the public. The radio listener measures only the entertainment value. It is how the program pleases that apparently counts."

JUST as Washingtonians heard the Crockett Mountaineers in person before they were presented to the national radio audience, those attending the National Geographic dinner to Jack La Gorce had an opportunity to hear Robert Conchi, the 12-year-od music prodigy of France, before he made his radio debut in this country.

Presented by Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Conchi, with bobbed hair, looked more like a plump little girl dressed up in boys' clothes. First he played the violin, then the piano, then the cello, then the accordion and finally the xylophone. It seemed incredible that one so young could do all these things so well.

Incidentally it remained for Mr. Buck, who is sponsor for the annual Victor Herbert memorial broadcast, to make one of the wittiest remarks of the occasion. Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, in behalf of the board of trustees of the National Geographic Society, had just presented Mr. La Gorce with a globe atlas of the world.

At the conclusion of the presentation this large globe was placed on the floor, in front of the guest of honor and just below the dais, where he was seated. When Mr. Buck arose to speak, he said, referring to Mr. La Gorce and indicating the globe:

"I have heard of a person having the world at his feet but this is the first time I have ever actually seen it."

DESPITE the tactful explanation given by Samuel D. Fuson, press representative, Leopold Stokowski, as a radio engineer, has evidently confirmed the opinion that he is one of the greatest living orchestra conductors.

"Mr. Stokowski's answer to the flood of letters and telegrams received by him since the recent radio concert by his Philadelphia Orchestra came in the form of an announcement that he has discarded a part of the mysterious device used to control the volume of that broadcast," Mr. Fuson, of Erwin, Wasey & Co., tells us.

"He has not, however, receded one iota from his position that there is room for vast improvement in the technique of broadcasting symphonic music.

"Instead of using the device originally perfected by himself and NBC engineers, the noted conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra announces he will use 'three new types of equipment' when his orchestra goes on the air next Sunday afternoon!"

One type of equipment we suggest Mr. Stokowski might use is his full orchestra of 110 pieces instead of trying to pawn off 55 pieces on an unsuspecting public as he did the last time. Our own opinion was that the "mysterious device" which he touted so highly was simply a bid for publicity. This is, we believe, borne out by the following comment from Musical America and the subsequent discarding of the device by Stokowski:

"The secrecy in which Leopold Stokowski shrouded his introduction of a new principle in controlling tone in orchestral broadcasts had the desired effect. There is no surer way to the public prints than a little well-managed coyness. Newspaper reporters were keen on the trail, so tantalizingly blockaded against their penetration and, baffled, wrote columns of speculation. The public read, wondered, and probably listened in droves to the first seasonal Philadelphia Orchestra broadcast. What more is there to be desired?

"Nothing but admiration can be expressed for Stokowski's superpress-agentry. When he wants to get into the public eye, he gets there."

Mr. Stokowski got there all right, in the last broadcast, but there was nothing about the undertaking, mechanical or otherwise, that will add any luster to his fine reputation as a conductor.

THE program for the Kellogg Slumber Music under the direction of Ludwig Laurier tonight at 11 o'clock (WLW or WJZ will probably be our best stations on this) follows:

Hungarian Dances V and VI, Brahms; Waltz from "Coppelia," Delibes; Prize Song, "Die Meistersinger," Wagner, violin solo; "Babes in Toyland" selections, Herbert; "Clair de Lune," Debussy, and "Salut d'Amour," Elgar.

The Armistice Day service at the tomb of Woodrow Wilson in Washington Cathedral will be broadcast throughout the Nation by both networks, Tuesday, Armistice Day, at 3:30 o'clock.

The Cathedral Choir, under the direction of Edgar Priest, choirmaster and organist, will lead the congregation in singing favorite hymns of the late President.

CREDITED with being the one who converted his father to radio, Arthur Pryor, jr., the other night told this story about the famous band leader and probably the world's greatest trombonist.

It seems in the old days before Arthur Pryor connected up with Sousa, he was poor—very poor. Getting down to his last quarter, he decided to toss it up to see whether he would get a shave or eat.

To his consternation, when the quarter descended, he failed to catch it and it disappeared in an iron grating.

Hotel to Displace Old London Inn

Once Was Grandstand for Public Hangings Rich Attended.

London, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Halls which once resounded to the shrieks of the condemned are crumbling under wreckers' sledges here. Work of razing the King of Denmark Inn, one of the country's most famous hosteiries, is well under way, preparatory to erecting a modern hotel and even the famous old "Dutch Kitchen" is not to be spared.

In years gone by the inn was known as the "Magpie and the Stump." Its proximity to Newgate jail and the hangman's scaffold in the time of public executions brought it much custom. At such times places at the front windows were in great demand. Young blades of that time leased whole suites in the front of the house and invited guests to see the hangings.

Guests of the inn had places of vantage at the last public execution in England, that of Michael Barrett, hanged May 28, 1868, for attempting to blow up the old Clerkenwell prison. Years before this, Phoebe Harris, 30, was burned at the stake in front of the inn for counterfeiting.

Germans Are Victims In Strife Over Toys

Berlin, Nov. 8.—Christmas toys are the cause of a trade war in Europe this summer, with German toymakers the victors. German agents have been active in other countries, and price-cutting has been greater than in any recent season.

German toymakers expect the biggest year since the World War. One salesman is reported to have returned to Berlin with orders totaling more than $1,200,000.

Jail Meals Are Cut In Rochester, Minn.

Rochester, Minn., Nov. 8.—The Rochester Jail is not going to be the cozy club it used to be. Mayor J. T. Lammon issued orders that the club breakfast of coffee, little pig sausages and cakes which have been served to guests during the summer are to be cut down.

The heavy influx of "lodgers" who are stopping at the jail over night and breakfast with the coming of cool weather prompted this action. Only coffee and cakes will be served in the meals down to 15 cents from the previous 35 cent level.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN ARMY NEAR 19,000

1,774,180 Persons Reported Attending Rites Held for Soldiers.

PRAISE GIVEN TO SCOUTS

Nearly 19,000 religious services were conducted on Army reservations and transports during the past year, the annual report of Col. Julian E. Yates, chief of chaplains of the Army, to the Secretary of War reveals.

Approximately 1,774,180 persons attended the 18,791 services during the past fiscal year, Col. Yates reports. These figures include 1,423 services conducted by civilian clergymen in the absence of Army chaplains. They do not include, however, the large attendance of Army personnel at services in churches near military stations.

The present strength of the Chaplain Corps is 119, Col. Yates states, including 1 colonel, 4 lieutenant colonels, 24 majors, 78 captains and 15 first lieutenants. There are 206 chaplains in the National Guard, and 1,120 in the Officers Reserve Corps. One hundred and sixty-five of these officer have a dual status in the Reserve Corps and National Guard.

A large number of the members of the Chaplains Reserve Corps are taking advantage of the provisions made in Army regulations for active duty training, it is reported. Evidence such as this points to an increased interest in the Army by clergymen in the reserve, Col. Yates declares.

Praise is given to the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts and to the efforts of Army chaplains in organizing and encouraging these societies by the chief of chaplains. "It is the mature conviction of all who are in a position to judge that no organization of adolescent youth holds such promise for the development of character and citizenship consciousness as the scouts," states Col. Yates.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Rise of Abdul Aziz Ibn Saud, Ruler of Arabia, Has Been Remarkable, Writer Points Out—Mighty Monarch Was Once Obscure Chieftain—At 50 Has Four Wives—Has No Standing Army, but Can Bring 500,000 Men Onto the Field of War. Koran Is His Constitution. Believing Self Losing in Popularity He Resigned, but Was Not Permitted to Do So—Controls Country by Wireless and Telephone. Automobile Has Displaced Camel—Aviation Introduced—Bandjtry Controlled. Encourages "Protestantism" in Religion — Cities Made Sanitary.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of the most romantic figures in the world today is Abdul Aziz Ibn Saud, Imam of the Wahabis, and ruler of Arabia.

Until a few years ago, Ibn Saud, as the leader of the fanatical Wahabi tribesmen, was an obscure chieftain. Today he is a mighty monarch, bearing the impressive title of "King of Hejaz and Sultan of Nejd and Its Dependencies," ruling over millions of people, and dealing with the great world powers on terms of equality. Millions of Arabs and other Mohammedans outside his domain look to him for delivery from foreign yoke, and European governments, recognizing the influence which he wields over the Moslem world, are vieing with each other in courting his friendship. His government has been recognized by a number of powers, and diplomatic relations have been established with many countries.

Ibn Saud's rise to power began in 1922, when he vanquished Ibn Rasheed, the powerful Emir of the Rowala tribes, and the traditional enemy of the Wahabis and the Saud family. This victory made him the master of Nejd, and he was forthwith declared sultan of that country. But this success brought with it new enemies. Hejaz was then ruled by King Hussein, a descendant of the Prophet Mohammed, who viewed with alarm the triumph of this desert leader. No sooner did Ibn Saud become the ruler of Nejd than he found himself at odds with the King of Hejaz. Raiding bands, dashing back and forth across the uncertain and unguarded frontiers, made matters worse. Intrigue, both foreign and domestic, fanned the flames of jealousy and hatred. Efforts to settle the difficulties amicably failed and in 1924 Ibn Saud invaded Hejaz. Hussein's forces were badly defeated in the first major engagement, and he abdicated the throne in favor of his son, Alli, hoping thus to appease the wrath of the invaders.

King Alli sued for peace in vain, for Ibn Saud declared his determination to rid the country not only of Hussein, but of his entire family also. The campaign was pushed with renewed vigor until Mecca, the capital, fell, and Hussein and his household were forced to seek refuge on board a British war vessel, which carried them to Cyprus, where they still live as exiles. Ibn Saud was crowned King of Hejaz, and after installing his son, Feisal, as viceroy, returned to his capital, Riyadh.

Since his capture of Mecca, the capital of Islam, Ibn Saud has been idolized by Mohammedans everywhere. Keman's coup in Turkey, which culminated in abolishing the caliphate, increased his influence. Those who formerly paid homage to the sultan of Turkey as the head of all Mohammedans, are now forced to transfer their allegiance elsewhere. And Ibn Saud, zealous in matters of religion and a really independent Mohammedan ruler, seems to be the logical successor to the caliphate. Arabs in the mandated territories of Syria and Palestine look to him for assistance in obtaining their freedom. Some of his enthusiastic admirers cherish the hope that he will reestablish the Arab empire, which at one time stretched from the Indian Ocean to the Atlantic, and revive the Arabian culture to which modern civilization owes its existence.

Ibn Saud is still in his fifties and enjoys vigorous health. He has been married several times and has an army of children. The Mohammedan law allows a man four wives, if he is able to support them and brave enough to make the attempt, and in case of the divorce or the death of a wife, replacements are permitted. As it might be expected in a country like Arabia, the king, brave as he is, has taken full advantage of this provision with the result that now he has a marriage record that puts to shame the combined record of a dozen Hollywood stars.

Abdul Aziz's bravery is not confined to the field of matrimony. He has proved his mettle on the battlefields time and again and has established an enviable record as a soldier. He is always first to reach the battlefield when war is declared, and very often leads his men when they charge the enemy. The Arabs still cling to the idea that a king must lead in war as well as peace, and would not respect one who prefers to stay at home when fighting is going on.

The government which this desert leader heads, although simple in its organization, is hard to classify. Theoretically, it is an autocracy, but in practice it is very much of a democracy. The sultan-king is recognized as an absolute monarch, with no restrictions upon his powers, or a senate to block his way. But his recognition by his subjects lasts only as long as he is popular with them.

Last year Ibn Saud set a new precedent for kings to follow. He thought that his popularity had diminished, and that certain tribes were not pleased with his rule. So he went to work, called together all the princes, emirs, heads of tribes, sheiks and 'ulemas—men versed in Moslem law and theology—and surprised everybody by telling the conference that his usefulness as a king is at an end, tendered his resignation, and asked those present to elect a new ruler. His resignation was promptly rejected, and after being assured that the people were 100 per cent behind him, he decided to stay.

Ibn Saud is supposed to hold the legislative, executive and judicial functions, but he never interferes in any of these matters except to correct abuses and insure the impartial administration of justice. He has created an "advisory council" and gave it the sole power of legislation. All proposed bills are drafted by the office of the attorney general, and submitted to the council. If the council approves the bill, it becomes law and must be obeyed by all, including the king, who has no higher status before the law than any of his subjects. He can be hailed before the courts the same as any other person. The maxim which says "the king can do no wrong" does not hold good in Arabia. Ibn Saud has demonstrated, by submitting to the jurisdiction of the courts, that he is a sincere believer in this doctrine.

Another admirable trait which Ibn Saud has, and one which has gained him many friends, is his dislike for pomp and extravagance. Perhaps this is due to his religious beliefs, for he is still the Imam of the Wahabis, who are noted for their austerity.

The Wahabis in Islam resemble the Protestants in Christianity. The sect was founded by Mohammed Abdul Wahab, who wandered in Arabia in the eighteenth century, calling for a return to the early form of Islam. He recognized no authority except the Koran, condemned the offering of prayer to saints and visits to shrines as idolatrous, urged the faithful to purge the religion of Mohammed of the myths and superstitions which had crept into it, and denounced all luxuries as sinful. He forbade the use of tobacco and intoxicating liquors, and insisted upon absolute impartiality in the administration of justice. He did not meet with any success until he converted Saud, great-grandfather of Abdul Aziz, who became the head of the new sect, and devoted his energies to the spreading of the new gospel. The Sauds have since been at the head of the Wahabis.

Abdul Aziz does not take his position as Imam (high priest) lightly. The teachings of Wahabism are not reflected in his personal conduct alone, but in his official actions as well. He regards the Koran as a sort of a constitution for his country, and has never sanctioned the adoption of a new policy or the enactment of a new bill which is not in harmony with its teachings. In a speech delivered recently at the opening of the advisory council's sessions, he told the members:

"The law of Islam is the foundation of our government. Within this sphere you are free to pass any bill which may seem to you in the interest of the country, provided it is not contrary to law of Islam. Nothing that is in conflict with the sacred law can be beneficial to the people, and much harm may result from following a policy not in accord with the foundations laid by our prophet, Mohammed."

At first this attitude caused thousands of Arabs outside Nejd, including pious Mohammedans, to turn against Ibn Saud. They feared that he would establish a sort of a theocracy, force Wahabism upon his subjects, and hinder the progress of the people. These fears have largely been dissipated. When Hejaz was conquered he did not attempt to impose Wahabism upon its people, nor did he make radical changes in the structure of its government. And instead of checking the progress of modern civilization, he has given it an impetus, and is doing his utmost to modernize the country and induce the people to adopt modern methods.

Since his ascent to the throne of Arabia, Ibn Saud has established a network of wireless stations which now enable him to communicate with any point in Nejd or Hejaz instantly. Last month fifteen new stations were added to this network, four of which were mobile units, mounted on special truck. Telephone exchanges have been established in the larger cities, and the mosque of the Holy Caaba is now lighted by electricity. The automobile has been introduced to the Bedouins in earnest, and thousands of them are now traveling by fast motor cars instead of the slow camels. Mecca, Medina and other centers of population now have public health inspection service, and sanitary measures have been adopted to safeguard the health of the thousands of pilgrims who annually flock to the tomb of Mohammed. Artesian wells have been drilled along the desert highways so that travelers may not have to go without water until they reach the oasis.

And an aeroplane squadron has just been purchased, and plans are now on foot to teach Arab youths how to fly. And all this has been accomplished without offending the religious feeling of the people. In this respect Ibn Saud has proved himself a better leader than Amanullah of Afghanistan, who lost his throne in his attempt to introduce modern methods among his subjects.

Perhaps Ibn Saud's greatest and most amazing feat is his success in maintaining law and order. With the exception of such cities as Mecca and Medina, where thousands of pilgrims are always found, there is no police system in Arabia, and the people are without any police protection. Yet Arabia today enjoys such peace and such security as no other country enjoys. All travelers agree that banditry and tribal raids, heretofore common among the Bedouins, have been completely suppressed; caravan roads have been rendered absolutely safe; lost property is always returned to the owner intact.

Just how this can be accomplished without a large police force and detective bureaus, may be difficult for Americans to understand. But it should be remembered that, in the first place, life in Arabia is still very simple, and it is therefore easier to maintain law and order there than in a large city like Chicago, with its gangs and underworld organizations. In the second place Ibn Saud has always dealt most severely with law violators. It has been policy to apprehend criminals at any cost, sometimes sending a whole regiment of soldiers to capture a single bandit. And when caught, offenders are invariably given the maximum penalty. This made banditry a very dangerous occupation, and soon was given up in favor of more peaceful pursuits.

Another curious fact about this desert fighter, who has defeated several powerful opponents and made himself master of Arabia, is that he has no standing army. His entire military establishment in time of peace consists of a few hundred men, mostly technical men such as artillery officers, machine gunners, armored car drivers and aeroplane pilots. But when war is declared, every able-bodied man must join the colors, and whenever possible, bring with him his mount, rifle and ammunition. The government is thus spared the heavy burden of supporting a large army, and taxes are kept exceedingly low.

It is estimated that Ibn Saud can place in the field 600,000 fighting men. And this fact makes those

CHAPTER XXXV.

Three days elapsed after the conversation between Lady Gwendolen and the inspector, and still he had not returned to Alston Manor. Lady Gwendolen had no difficulty in securing her brother's boxes of snapshots, which were in storage, and she had passed part of each day going through them without as yet having discovered those which Inspector Linscott was so anxious to see. She had also spent part of each day with Robin.

After her first visit he felt as if a new world had dawned for him. His eyes regained their accustomed spark and he no longer brooded over his still dark and obscure future, but lived for each day as it came, and brought his dear one to him. After the first visit she had come with Lady Dorothy, never alone, but Robin felt as if they had a secret understanding.

He was always agreeable to Lady Dorothy, but often he quite forgot the older woman was there, even while he spoke to her. If she noticed this, she at least never revealed any suspicion of the state of his heart. She just came as usual with her friendly offerings of dainties to cheer the tiny cell. Robin often marveled at the power she seemed to have over the attendants, who, at a word from her, would run to do her bidding. It was a power gained by kindness and genuine love of her neighbors; a power of the spirit which is the greatest of all powers. She had come to call Robin by his given name, and often just "my boy," and she genuinely felt responsible for his future, and more guilty than was needful because of her thoughtlessness in putting him into a little side-room, and driving him—as she thought of it—to flight.

It was the evening of the fourth day, and Lady Dorothy and the explorer were seated in the garden talking. Bruce Armstrong had stayed continuously at Alston Manor during the inspector's absence, but it could be seen that he was getting increasingly restless with every passing day which brought no news.

"If we don't hear from Linscott tonight," he was saying to Lady Dorothy, as he flicked the ashes from his cigar, and blew wide circles up into the warm night air, "I shall go to town in the morning. It's strange, I tell you. When I telephoned Inspector Deemer this afternoon, he said he had not seen him."

"That may have been diplomacy . . ." interrupted Lady Dorothy, smiling.

"Diplomacy be damned!" expostulated Armstrong. "Your poet will be coming up for trial before long, and if nothing's been done, how do you think it will go with him?"

Lady Dorothy's face became grave. "But I feel sure the inspector is busy working on the case," she said, to quiet her own doubts. "Perhaps he can't get in touch with us."

The sound of approaching footsteps on the gravel of the path interrupted her. She turned partly around, still nervous about sounds she did not recognize.

"Good evening! I hope I'm not intruding," said a voice, which she immediately recognized. She hastily arose and held out her hand in greeting.

"No, indeed, Mr. Flint! This is a pleasure. I'll call Lady Gwendolen. Where is your car?"

"I left it in front, and, as the butler said I should find you in the garden, I took the liberty of presenting myself unannounced. Ah, Armstrong, so you are still on the job!" He turned and stretched out his hand to the explorer, who had been standing quietly in the shadow.

"I'll just leave you two together for a moment, and call Lady Gwendolen," Lady Dorothy said, as she turned toward the house. She was all aflutter. It had upset her when Lady Gwendolen had broken her brief engagement, and this visit looked like a move toward reconciliation, and she was glad. For she genuinely felt that Lady Gwendolen was throwing away the chance of a lifetime . . . and, besides, the dear girl was becoming noticeably interested in the poor young poet. Now, poor poets were all very well as middle-aged ladies' pets, but as young girls' husbands they were obviously impossible. She hurried her steps, and knocked softly on Lady Gwendolen's door.

There was no answer, but, as the door was unlatched, after a moment's hesitation she gently pushed it open and peered within. Lady Gwendolen was seated on the floor, with a lamp beside her, and completely surrounded with snapshots, one of which she was gazing at in such deep absorption that it was apparent she had not heard her friend's approach.

Now she looked up startled. The strange light in the dark eyes for a moment left Lady Dorothy speechless. They were like burning coals, and seemed to see her through and through.

"Oh, I'm sorry, dear!" Lady Gwendolen jumped to her feet. "I hadn't heard you, and I was thinking of something else. . . ."

She still clutched the picture at which she had been looking so intently when Lady Dorothy entered.

"I came to tell you that Mr. Flint has come to call. . . ."

The rich red color flooded Lady Gwendolen's neck and face, and her eyes were half closed as if she would shut in the look into their innermost depths. She swayed uncertainly for an instant, then drew herself up.

"Tell him I will be down at once," she said very quietly.

Lady Dorothy looked at the younger woman with grave concern.

"There's nothing wrong, is there, dear?" she asked, sympathetically.

A low, mocking laugh filled with pain was her only answer, as Lady Gwendolen stood straight in front of her.

"Tell me, dear, what is it? Perhaps I can help you." Lady Dorothy put her hand caressingly on her arm, which perceptibly trembled.

"It's nothing, dearest, nothing you can help, at any rate." The girl's voice was steadier and more natural now. She slipped the picture into her bosom and turned to the mirror to give her hair an extra brush. "Will I do without changing?"

"You look lovely!" was the enthusiastic response. "That sleeveless black dress is particularly becoming."

Again came that queer mocking laugh.

"I must get in touch with Inspector Linscott at once," Lady Gwendolen said. "Don't tell any one, Lady Dorothy, not even Mr. Armstrong; but please, I beg of you, phone New Scotland Yard, and tell them to tell Inspector Linscott at once that I have important information, and he is to hurry down here and bring two other men with him . . ."

"What are you talking about?" Lady Dorothy surveyed her young guest in alarm.

"Don't ask now, dearest, I beg of you. Just go quietly, without letting any one suspect, and do just as I ask you. I'll go into the garden meanwhile and entertain the two men. Go, now, quickly, please!"

Lady Dorothy looked doubtfully at the burning eyes. Lady Gwendolen's face was as white now as it had been red but a few minutes before. Her voice, however, showed no trace of emotion, but had a commanding ring.

"All right, dear. I will phone, just as you say. Only I don't understand . . ." Lady Dorothy turned bewildered eyes on the girl at her side.

"It's better for you not to understand . . . yet," Lady Gwendolen replied gently. "You might betray it to him . . ." she added under her breath, as she turned down the stairs and into the garden.

Greatly perplexed, Lady Dorothy paused for an instant where she stood. Lady Gwendolen had spoken with a peculiar significance. Yet so mysteriously, too. What was brewing? Something terrible, she was sure. But now was no time to think. She must do what the young girl had bidden her: there had been something so deliberately authoritative in Lady Gwendolen's manner and voice. "Dear me! Dear me!" she murmured to herself, as thoughtfully she directed her steps to the telephone.

Meanwhile Lady Gwendolen was chatting with the two men in the garden. She appeared gay, unusually gay, after the several days of unrelieved sadness. Her laugh rose, mingled with the men's.

Both men seemed to like it, falling in with her mood. They were delighted to see her come back to her natural self, the gay, exuberant girl they had known before the tragedy. The three soon chatted away about all sorts of things, serious and inane.

"By the way, Gwen," said Flint, "have you heard the news about Muriel?"

"Muriel Haddon, you mean?"

Flint nodded in the affirmative. It was clear that the news about Muriel Haddon hadn't yet reached Alston Manor.

"Well, she gave a concert the other evening at Queen's Hall, played brilliantly, too, had curtain-call after curtain-call, but toward the end of it completely broke down in her dressing room. The manager had to come on the stage and announce that she couldn't finish the concert. And now I hear that the doctor has advised her to take a rest of several months."

"Poor thing!" said Lady Gwendolen. "She probably has overworked herself. She hasn't looked overstrong to me."

"Yes," put in Armstrong. "A charming woman, but rather overcivilized. Civilization, you know, is not good for nerves. Give me a savage any day!"

Lady Gwendolen laughed delightedly. "You know, of course," she turned to Flint, "Mr. Armstrong's hobby. He'd turn us all into savages, if he had his own way."

"Anyhow, I shouldn't have to turn you into one," retorted the explorer, with a good-natured smile.

"The savage can bite!" joined in Flint. "Anyhow, Mr. Armstrong obviously thinks that you're already enough of one."

"I'm afraid I can only bark!" said Lady Gwendolen. "But I'd give a lot to be really able to bite. Wouldn't I, though!"

Both men laughed, and Lady Gwendolen joined in.

By this time Lady Dorothy joined them, and sat down near Lady Gwendolen. The latter raised her eyes to the older woman's; in answer to the question in their dark depths Lady Dorothy nodded slightly in the affirmative.

Uncle Sam's Home Hints

BOILING CLOTHES.

(Bureau of Home Economics.)

The clothes may be boiled if it is desired to disinfect them thoroughly, but this is not necessary. Under good conditions of washing, rinsing and drying, boiling may be omitted.

If clothes are to be boiled, wring them from the wash water, place in fresh hot soapy water, and boil them for five to ten minutes. Longer boiling has a tendency to yellow the fabrics. As the clothes are lifted from the boiler allow them to drain as much as possible.

If the clothes are very dirty or yellowed, kerosene or turpentine (inflammable) may be added in the proportion of one to six tablespoons for a boilerful of water. The clothes must be thoroughly rinsed in order to remove the odor, which is very objectionable to many persons. This is a serious difficulty if hard water is used. Turpentine is also sometimes injurious to the hands. An easier but more expensive method of whitening clothes is to add the juice of two lemons to a boilerful.

Rinsing.

After the clothes have been washed and boiled, rinse them thoroughly in plenty of hot, clear, soft water. Cold water hardens the soap and makes it more difficult to remove. Do not place bluing in the rinse water, as it is essential that all soap and washing powders be removed from the clothes before bluing is added. Rinsing is of great importance. Soap and washing powders weaken and yellow fabrics when allowed to remain in them indefinitely. Wring the clothes from the rinse water as before.

Lovely hair!

Modern hair dressers add beauty to your hair by graceful lines and contours. It is just as important to keep your hair soft, lustrous, abundant, rich in color.

Millions of girls and women are doing this at home with the easy help of Danderine. It is so simple to use. All you do is put a little on your brush each time you arrange your hair.

Instantly Danderine brings out the natural color of dingy, lifeless hair; makes it more sparkling and lustrous than brilliantine; makes it easy to manage; holds it in place.

The consistent use of Danderine dissolves the crust of dandruff; stops falling hair; tends to make the hair grow long, silky and abundant. Five million bottles used a year.

FAITH AND COURAGE SEEN BUSINESS AID

Stimulation of Mental Virtues Is Urged as Cure for Depression.

TIME TO BEGIN IS NOW

By EDSON W. BRIGGS.

It is impossible to set any definite time or make any accurate forecast as to when the present business depression, either locally or nationally, will end. The only guide is in finding the reason or reasons for the sudden change from peak prosperity to acute depression.

There can be no doubt but that the orgy of gambling in stocks was a major contributing factor. But this seems to be an effect rather than a cause. Perhaps overproduction, installment buying, extravagant purchasing and many other factors are also partially to blame for the general cessation in industrial activity with the resulting unemployment. Again, these are largely effects instead of causes. It is necessary to probe deeper. The basic cause is more elusive than this, the germ of depression is more difficult to isolate. If the depression is mental, as is generally regarded to be the case, it would not be illogical to assume that the cause had its inception in the mind.

In the opinion of the writer the present depression was superinduced and is directly traceable to two conditions. First, the World War, and second, the period of prosperity which followed it. These two factors combined to bring about on the part of the masses a new state of mind and outlook on life.

Effect of World War.

The World War upheaval because of its tremendous proportions and far-reaching effects revolutionized human thought and action, biased judgment, and distorted all sense of proportion and values. The people who during that period had learned to think in terms of billions were suddenly called upon to reason in terms of dollars and cents.

In the era of unprecedented prosperity preceding the collapse, the people tasted of luxuries, pleasures and remuneration for their labors far beyond anything heretofore experienced. They became intoxicated with prosperity, a dangerous and insatiable appetite for effortless gain to satisfy this craving was developed. The far-seeing wisdom of George Washington in recognizing this danger is shown in this excerpt from his first Thanksgiving proclamation "... preserve us from the arrogance of prosperity, and from hazarding the advantages we enjoy by delusive pursuits." That such was not good for the people, that they were unprepared mentally for such abundant prosperity was clearly demonstrated. Sound doctrines and practices were regarded as obsolete and cast aside, new economic laws were proclaimed, life became neither "real" nor "earnest," and a period of physical and mental stagnation followed.

This changed mental attitude or state of mind which resulted, struck at the root and undermined the foundation of those very attributes which have been the sinews of this Nation, and in this false state of mind lies the real cause for the depression. Stocks were bid up to perilous prices in the hopes of gain on account of a newly acquired, universal craving for luxuries and desire for soft living. The quest for a short-cut to riches—to receive without giving a corresponding amount of thought, work or effort is contrary to all economic laws. Sometimes the action of these laws seems to be untrue or at least temporarily suspended. But their operation is certain and immutable. The people were pursuing a forlorn hope. The financial way to satisfy their desires was made easy. And listening to the siren voice of misguided optimists who should have known better and others who for political or financial benefit to themselves exploited a dangerous situation, they rushed madly and thoughtlessly on to new heights of extravagance and folly. The condition which followed and still exists was the inevitable result.

Depression Largely Mental.

It is generally conceded that the depression is largely mental, that there is the same need for commodities and the same amount of money to purchase them (although it may be in different hands), as was the case during the boom. Because the condition responsible for the depression is largely mental does not simplify but rather serves to complicate any accurate prediction as to when business will return to prosperity. When a patient has a known organic trouble it is not difficult for a specialist to diagnose and to predict with reasonable certainty when recovery, if such is to be the case, will take place. The physician also knows of certain specific remedies to effect a cure. But when the disease is mental, it is more difficult to produce a cure or to foretell in advance what the reaction to remedial treatment will be. And such is the case today with the business or economic patient. When the quest for gold turned out to be at the rainbow's end and fortunes large and small were dissipated, the people were stunned and surrendered to an all-encompassing fear and gloom, temporarily counted out.

They are now waiting for good times to return. Waiting for some magician's touch, either governmental or otherwise, to restore prosperity. Real prosperity will return to Washington only when it returns to the Nation. The depression will end when the former invincible fighting spirit returns, when the people are happy to work and glad to receive pay commensurate with the efforts they expend. Waiting and hoping will not bring back prosperityy, but hard work and wise spending will quickly dispel the cloud of gloom and the sun of prosperity will again shine forth. It will be the same familiar sun, the business depression will pass away and be forgotten. New goals of achievement and endeavor will be envisioned. The need of the hour, therefore, is a recrudescence of that vigor and will to do which was ever the outstanding coaracteristic of America before the debacle of last fall, fall.

Real, constructive, coordinated thought and action is now being given to hasten the return of sound prosperity by those well qualified to bring it about. Their efforts, encouraged and supported by similar ones from every true American, will destroy the paralysis of fear and rekindle the fires of faith and courage—the only panaces for the ills of depression.

REALTORS TO STUDY FACTORY BUILDINGS

Prevention of Untimely Demise Will Be Sought by Division.

PLAN FINANCE INQUIRY

With a view to the prevention of the untimely demise of buildings from which industries are removing, the industrial property division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards at its recent Detroit conference named a committee of realtor location experts who will study industrial buildings with the purpose of determining whether or not it is feasible to attempt to plan such structures so that they are adaptable to the manufacturing processes of a wide variety of industries.

Expansion of business may mean a given industry needs a totally different location; transportation facilities and sources of power and of raw products may necessitate changed location for a manufacturing plant, or fashion and the ever-changing wants and desires of the consumer may doom the product of the industry and cause the death of the concern. Then what of the building which has been especially built to house one particular industry?

Use Too Restricted.

It is the belief of the division that the present prevailing limited usage to which industrial buildings are restricted is, for the most part, due to the fact that the structures were planned without taking into consideration the fact that at some future time it might be advisable for them to house totally different industries.

The newly appointed committee will work toward setting forth specific recommendations for the planning of industrial buildings, recommendations on size, light and space, which would afford owners of industrial property some guide whereby to build for the maximum utility from a structure and from which financing concerns could judge whether they are putting resources into a structure whose prosperity hangs on the particular industry it is built to house or are putting funds into a building which has a wide scope of usefulness.

Members of the committee in charge of making the study are: J. C. Ericson, Chicago, chairman; Joel L. Schlesinger, Newark, N. J.; W. K. Ballard, Boston, Mass., and James Carey Martien, Baltimore, Md.

Will Investigate Financing.

An investigation of ways and means of supplying funds to new industries and to industries that require more capital in order to make them profitable assets to their communities is to be launched by the division this fall, it was announced at the Detroit meeting. Various plans for bringing additional capital to industries equipped to undertake more production but lacking the necessary funds for expansion will be analyzed.

Both plans developed by individual financing corporations and plans developed by communities will be examined. The special committee appointed to conduct this survey includes J. H. Van Vlissengen, Chicago, chairman; W. E. G. Gaillard, New York City, vice chairman; W. G. Burchfield, Houston, Tex.; G. Harvey Porter, Baltimore, Md., and F. B. Ayres, Louisville, Ky.

The Detroit meeting stressed the importance to industrial location experts of the new Government statistics included in the census of manufactures and distribution. Fred A. Goanell, chief supervisor of the United States Bureau of the Census and director of the new census of manufactures and distribution, outlined the information which the Government is to make available through these new compilations.

It was brought out further that industrial realtors will be able to draw on this data in a very detailed way in locating manufacturing plants through a complete analysis of these new Government figures made by George C. Smith, director of the Industrial Bureau of St. Louis and chairman of the industrial property division. Mr. Smith's published analysis is shortly to be sent to all members of the industrial property division.

The analysis applies the Government figures practically to the problems of manufacturers, distributors and communities, showing how, through the use of these statistics, the ability to buy in various areas can be accurately estimated—information never before available to industrial organizations and which will be of great value to the organization laying plans for expansion. Mr. Smith has gone further than the Government in continuing the classifications of groups and subgroups of wholesale houses and other distributors, listing what they handle in minute detail. The analysis shows the changes now taking place in the field of merchandise distribution, important factors to be considered by industry today.

MORALE HELD NEED IN CITY PLANNING

Keen Civic Spirit Will Prevent Smallest Violation of Rules, Is View.

PEOPLE MUST BE LOYAL

A Nation-wide study to promote "better planning of all communities for permanent human use as essential to modern civilization" has been started by the committee on city and regional planning of the American Institute of Architects.

Finding that millions are wasted annually on ugly buildings, and that bad environment blights behavior, health and enjoyment of life, the committee, as its initial task, is seeking an answer to the question: "Can character and individuality of cities and regions be consciously attained?"

Replies thus far received indicate a conflict of opinion, according to Charles H. Cheney, of Los Angeles, chairman of the committee, in a statement made public here yesterday. Farsighted, intelligent planning and careful building up of the morale of the district is cited as the best method by J. C. Nichols, Kansas City, Mo., member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Herbert U. Nelson, of Chicago, executive secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, questions the value of conscious striving for municipal beauty. Cities are composed of men and women working for better standards of living, and will continue to improve the quality of their development, Gardner S. Rogers, of the civic development department of the United States Chamber of Commerce, declares. Others doubt whether American cities can have any well-defined character.

Original Movement Failed.

"The original 'city beautiful' movement failed, or at least did not succeed largely because it was concerned with surface good looks," says Mr. Nichols, developer of the Country Club district of Kansas City, characterized by Mr. Cheney as one of the three or four outstanding residential communities of the country.

"To assume decoration would give charm and character to a city that was structurally bad was as illogical as to assume a finely tailored suit would transfigure an unfortunate man afflicted with a physical deformity.

"Slowly, painfully, America learned the lesson that there are great fundamental considerations in city building. When the first city planner came among us to declare that his art simply consisted in exercising such foresight as would promote the orderly and sightly development of a city, with due regard for health, amenity and convenience, and for its commercial and industrial advancement, a revolution in our thought had occurred. And when the town planner looked beyond the corporate limits and included the city's environs, another advance took place.

Cleanliness Enhances Charm.

"Of course, mere cleanliness enhances the charm of an urban community. Orderliness goes much further. Nature furnished all the precedents for man in handling the landscape, whether in designing the street network or grouping buildings in pleasant relationships.

"Parks, not only great open areas, but small ones as well, are inspiring; playgrounds, a human necessity; segregated commercial, industrial and residential areas, essential for the sake of efficiency as well as congenial living; well designed commercial and domestic buildings, worth while; imposing public structures properly related, a worthy expression of the ideals and achievements of a free people. Control of the use of property for the good of the great majority is necessary as protection against the few who put self-interest above the general welfare.

"But, speaking from nearly a quarter century of experience in striving to apply the principles of the city planner to the practical demands of modern city living, especially as applied to the protection of home life through the perpetuation of fine influences not difficult to set up, the greatest thing to be desired is intangible.

Loyalty Prime Need.

"I refer to morale. Unless there is developed among the people a deep-seated loyalty to these things, no city is truly great. It isn't so much that the Country Club district, or any other home section, is lovely and wholesome today that matters. What is needed most is an alert and determined interest in checking the smallest violation of the rules laid down in the restrictions or the ordinances or statutes. The greatest asset a city or a neighborhood may claim is loyalty that is intelligent and unwavering.

"Fortunately, the planned city becomes the city intelligent, the city loyal. Morale grows out of something for which people may be proud. If city planning did nothing more than inspire a finer type of citizenship it would have justified itself. Since it is the great stabilizer of property values and the protector of wealth, it is one of the most practical things man ever has devised."

Practically all cities are alike in their mechanical equipment, Mr. Rogers points out, adding: "All have the telegraph and the telephone; light, power and heat; good roads and amusements, but there is a wide divergence among cities in these elements which make living more worth while and more profitable.

Best Advertising Media.

"The improvement of quality assists in the establishment of character, and character is the best of advertising media. We are attracted to people, not because they have accumulated quantities of worldly goods, not because they are large, nor because they can talk longer or faster than others, but because of their character. Character in a city as in man is the expression of its ideals and aspirations. It is personal and local.

"A city therefore should develop in accordance with local conditions and local section traditions. The elm, a beautiful and characteristic tree of New England cities, would be inappropriate in any of the Gulf Coast cities, and the palm-lined avenues of Los Angeles would appear ridiculous if developed in Chicago.

"A New York skyscraper does not make a city of 15,000 population a metropolis, and the building of a Philadelphia tenement house in a small town injures rather than improves the housing situation. The folk lore, sentiment and character of any section of the country is built around local conditions and local attributes, and it is these which should be utilized, refined and perfected in the building of a city. I therefore commend for your consideration the application of the principles which business has so successfully employed, namely, to improve the character of the municipal product as the best means of increasing the production, the enhancement of property values, and the realization of a more successful life."

Air Planes More Pleasing.

Mr. Nelson expresses the opinion of some of the realtors, according to Chairman Cheney's statement, in holding that beauty is a by-product of good order, utility and economy of design. "I think," Mr. Nelson continues, "that the airplanes of today are more pleasing than those of ten years ago, and that this quality derives from improvement in these factors.

"I am inclined to doubt, therefore, that conscious striving for beauty in our cities will give us the results we want and that you have in mind. I believe that if we plan our cities so as to utilize the ground most efficiently for structures and for traffic, so as to give to our citizens healthful conditions and convenient opportunities for recreation, the net result will be beautiful cities.

"European concepts of civic centers, boulevards and plazas are not adapted to American habits of living, although they dominated the National City Planning Conference fifteen years ago. The universal use of automobile transportation in this country makes possible cities of much greater area in proportion to population than the older type of cities. The conception on which Chicago is working strikes me as being sound, namely, to have great concentric circles of playground and forest reserve surrounding the city, giving easy access to all to real outdoor life.

For Residential Unit.

"I believe the point where architects and city planners should start their work today is with the family residential unit. I believe this unit to be inefficient and costly with relation to the needs it serves and in comparison with what could be developed with the scientific and technical knowledge we already have.

"When this problem is adequately solved, the rebuildings of American cities and communities can proceed with relation to the new solution. I often regret that architects do not give more time and thought to this matter. Most of those I meet are thinking in terms of exteriors and conscious esthetic effects based on tradition or habit."

One prominent citizen of Washington, D. C., informs the committee that there is "some slight evidence of originality" in American cities. "One town," he observes, "will have ten more oil signs on the right hand side of the main approach to the city than the next town. The next town has eighteen more chicken dinner signs than the town before.

"The town after that has its slums on the south side of the railroad tracks, and the town after that has them on the north side. Each town has the most wonderful chamber of commerce that was ever organized and a lot of other allied, uplift outfits who are long on conversation and extremely short on action."

MUCH OFFICE ROOM IS VACANT IN NATION

Percentage of 13.92 Largest Reported in Last Seven Years.

MORE NOW BUILDING

Special to The Washington Post.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—The October report of the committee on renting of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers reveals an ample supply of unused office space in practically all cities of the country. The survey made in 43 of the principal cities of the United States and Canada covers 1,960 office buildings with a total floor area of 166,998,875 square feet. Of this amount, 23,236,010 square feet are vacant, this figure representing more than the total office space reported from the cities of Cleveland, Philadelphia and Los Angeles combined. The percentage of vacancy, viz., 13.92 per cent, is the largest reported in the seven years that the association has been making frequent and periodic surveys of office building rental conditions.

In addition to the present vacancy, 11,054,562 square feet of office space are reported under construction. However, only 1,147,369 square feet of the office space under construction will be ready for occupancy by January 1, 1931. In the face of business conditions prevailing during the past year, and in view of new space brought on the market, it is quite remarkable that the percentage of vacancy has increased only 2.37 per cent since October, 1929.

R. W. McElroy, chairman of the committee on renting, states: "Our successive rental surveys show that American business for several years prior to 1930 was able to absorb a huge volume of office space annually, but that even in those prosperous times new office space was produced at a still faster rate. With our present vacancy figure of 23,236,000 square feet, to which 11,000,000 square feet of new construction is being added, it is evident that enough office space is available to fully take care of the needs of business expansion for at least two years. Any new office building project today should be given the closest possible study to ascertain if it has a reasonable chance for successful operation under existing conditions.

"Through the building plan service of our national association the advisability of constructing buildings at given locations is carefully considered and a complete analysis is made of each economic factor in their construction and operation. Through this building planning service, owners have been saved many millions of dollars in construction and operating costs.

"It has also safeguarded the economic integrity of a large number of existing office buildings and has, at the same time prevented many disappointing failures on the part of prospective office building owners and builders by bringing to bear on their problems wise counsel based on complete information as to rental and other pertinent conditions which would determine the success of any prospective new building."

BUILDING PERMITS

October building in the District had a total valuation of $2,191,665, statistics of the office of District Building Inspector Oehmann reveal. This is $1,041,335 less than the month a year ago, but $1,113,855 ahead of the previous month this year. Of the October total, $494,585 was for repairs and $1,696,780 for new work.

The latter was distributed by sections as follows: Northeast, $206,850; Southeast, $64,700; Northwest, $1,401,980; Southwest, $24,950. Repair work: Northeast, $92,795; Southeast, $67,230; Northwest, $280,510; Southwest, $54,350. There were 127 brick, 3 stone, 2 concrete, 2 tile and 8 frame buildings erected during the month; 22 brick and 9 frame were razed.

Lee Properties, Inc., was granted a permit by the office last week to build a seven-story brick, concrete and tile apartment building at 1417 N street northwest. The cost is $300,000.

William Montgomery, president of Acacia Mutual Life Association, filed application to build a two and one-half-story rubblestone residence at 6300 Nebraska avenue northwest. It will be built on a ten-acre lot and have a width of 128 feet, a depth of 41 feet and a height of 20 feet. Bradbury & Mohler will be the builders and Porter & Lockie the architects. The estimated cost of the dwelling is $50,000.

A. P. Jorss applied for a permit to build a two-story steel and brick office and shop at 1220-1230 Twenty-fourth street northwest. The estimated cost is $49,500. Porter & Lockie are the architects and Mr. Jorss will be the builder.

The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., of Akron Ohio., has applied to build a one-story brick, steel and stucco auto service station at 1301 K street northwest. The estimated cost is $18,000. The structure is an addition to the present building there on ground recently leased by the company.

Permits to build issued last week included the following:

Jacobson Brothers, two two-story brick and frame dwellings at 5327-31 Nebraska avenue, cost, $18,000.

Dr. Karl Langenbeck, one-story rear brick addition at 3210 Grace street northwest, cost, $2,500.

H. B. Shipp, one-story brick office and work shop at 2207 Channing street northeast, cost, $3,500.

E. F. Brinkley, one-story brick store at 533 Eighth street southeast, cost, $3,500.

Terminal Refrigerating & Warehousing Co., remodeling of F street side of building at Eleventh, Twelfth, E and F streets southwest, cost, $40,000.

Washington Gas Light Co., structural improvements at Twelfth and D streets southeast, cost, $5,000.

John H. Davis, one-story brick dwelling at 4061 Benning road northeast, cost, $4,500.

L. E. Harris, two-story brick and tile dwelling at 5307 Nevada avenue northwest, cost, $10,000.

Edmonds Art Stone Co., structural improvements at 3125 Queen Chapel road northeast, cost, $1,200.

H. H. Carter, two-story brick and frame dwelling at 3817 and 3819 Legation street, cost, $6,500.

Standard Construction Co., two two-story concrete and lumber dwellings at 3801-3803 Fourteenth street northeast, cost, $10,000.

Thieves Take Stones From Italian Bridge

Florence, Italy, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Preyed upon by nocturnal thieves, the Carrais bridge here has been seriously weakened by the removal of 200 carved cornice blocks.

The police, to whom the damage was reported by a local newspaperman, estimated that at least a year's work was represented by the gaping holes in the undersides of the arches. Each of the missing stones was estimated to weigh at least 1,000 pounds, and local officials are mystified as to how their removal was effected.

Bed Suite Made Of Million Pieces

Tiny Lots of Walnut and Other Woods Used by Filling Man.

Park Falls, Wis., Nov. 8.—In Andrew Halaksen's bedroom, behind his filling station here, stands a million-piece bedroom suite—at least 1,000,000 pieces. The bed, the dresser, a cedar chest and a stand each contain so many tiny bits of walnut, redwood and spruce, cut to patterns and fitted together, that the task of counting them appalls even the man who made the furniture.

Mr. Halaksen spent four winters putting together the little bits of wood, carrying out the same design in all four pieces of furniture. It is hard for any one inspecting the work to believe that this man never did any marquetry before—in fact, was not even a woodworker. The inlay appears flawless and nowhere is there a mistake in design.

The exact number of pieces in the furniture is not known. Mr. Halaksen said that he counted 10,000 pieces and could hold all of them in his two hands. Then he stopped counting.

TRAMP SHIP LADEN WITH PERSIAN ART

LOANED BY THE SHAH

London, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Valued at millions of dollars, the cream of ancient Persian craftsmanship arrived here in a tramp steamer, whose Negro crew thought she carried dates.

Loaned by the Shah of Persia to the Royal Academy for an international exhibition of Persian art, the treasure was under constant guard from the moment it was started toward the ship in Persia until it was locked up in strong rooms here.

The exhibition opens January 7 and will continue two months.

To defeat efforts of Persian bandits, three huge airplanes made several trips from Teheran to Absian flying their precious cargo to deep water and the ship which would bring it here. Even the name of the ship, the Baharistan, a 5,000-ton tramp steamer, was guarded in secrecy to minimize danger of pirates and none, says the captain, new the value of her cargo.

Of Great Splendor.

The treasures rival in splendor those of Aladdin's cave. There are specimens of Persian art, ranging from about 200 B. C. down to modern times. They include silken carpets woven in silver and gold, bronzes encrusted with gems, sacred manuscripts and pictures.

Many of the carpets have been brought from the sacred tomb of Shah Abbas II and have never yet been seen by the eyes of "infidels."

At an hour when the streets are comparatively deserted, these Arabian Nights treasures were taken secretly through London, under police escort, to Burlington House.

Carpets of Great Value.

Few Europeans have ever gazed on such treasures. There are carpets more precious than a Raphael or a Rembrandt. There are embroideries, imperishable in their loveliness, which were made to veil the beauties of medieval harems.

There is a set of silver vessels in rich filigree out of which it is said that the great caliph, Harun-al-Rashid of Bagdad, caroused. There are the crown jewels of Persia, jewel-studded weapons, and hundreds of ornaments that blaze in medleys of rich coloring.

And these objects of Persian art, worth a king's ransom, came into the Thames in a tramp steamer, their arrival unheralded and their absence from Persia unsuspected until their British custodians made sure that the priceless objects were all safely under lock and key.

Luxury Lap Quit By Philadelphian

Scion of Family of Wealth to Locate in South Seas.

Philadelphia, Nov. 8.—George Clymer Brooke, scion of a wealthy Philadelphia family, will desert the lap of luxury for life on a South Sea isle.

He has purchased two copra plantations on the Society Islands near Papeeto and plans to spend his days on his newly acquired estates with a Chinese man-of-all-work for company.

In letters received here by his mother, Mrs. Trenchant Newbold, and his grandfather, Effingham B. Morris, chairman of the board of the Girard Trust Co., young Brooke expressed his delight with his prospects.

"Raising cocoanuts down here surely beats sitting in an office chair back home," he wrote.

Brooke has spent the greater part of two years on the islands. Following his graduation from Yale, where he stroked the 150-pound crew, Brooke sailed from New London on the 76-foot schooner Chance with a party of other Yale graduates.

He became entranced with the Society Islands on debarking there, and started from the cruise.

Brooke now is in New Guinea, the last reported call of the yacht Zaca, owned by C. Templeton Crocker, of San Francisco. Brooke is making a short cruise with Crocker before taking permanent possession of his South Sea island paradise.

New Process Changes Wine Waste to Profit

Modena, Italy, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Astonishing results have attended a new process to reduce grape pulp, remaining after wine-making, to useful by-products. A factory with a capacity of 10,000 hundredweight of pulp annually has been built here in consequence, with the support of the Fascist National Confederation of Agriculture.

Among the products are alcohol, tartaric acid, cream of tartar, tannic acid, oil and even fuel bricks. Using the compressed dried pulp as fuel, the factory gets up steam in its boilers and creates its own electric power.

Paternity Test Found by Expert

Child's Fingerprints Bear Resemblance to Parents.

Hamburg, Nov. 8.—That fingerprints precisely like those used to identify criminals may help also to decide disputed fatherhood is urged by two investigators, Prof. Heinrich Poll and Dr. A. Lauer, of the Institute of Anatomy at the University of Hamburg, who have studied family and other resemblances between hundreds of thousands of prints.

The fingerprints of a child are not precisely the same as those of either parent; indeed, no two persons have yet been found in all the world whose fingerprints are exactly alike. Twins often have fingerprints much like each other, but even these always differ slightly. The Hamburg scientists find, however, that general resemblances exist in the fingerprint patterns of parents and children.

When the child's mother is known but the fatherhood unknown or disputed it usually is possible, they discover, to recognize in the fingerprint pattern of the child some features probably inherited from the mother and others probably from the father. By comparing these probable paternal characters with the finger tips of persons suspected of the fatherhood reasonably good guesses often can be made as to the truth.

Swiss Remit Taxes Of Rich Germans

Communities Competing With One Another on Entering Levies.

Basel, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Swiss communities are competing with one another in offering favorable taxation terms to German capitalists, who have recently crossed the frontier in such numbers as to cause real concern to Berlin.

Dr. Amberg, director of finances of Lucerne, has frankly admitted that the city was concluding taxation arrangements with arriving Germans every day. These contracts run up to five years' proposed residence in Lucerne and as a rule a certain lump sum is assessed, while the rest of the fortune is ignored.

Some cases are said to have come to light where Grman capitalists declared only 1,000,000 francs—about $200,000—while the rest of their wealth, at times amounig to several million dollars, remained untaxed.

Geneva has let it be known that every capitalist who promises not to engaged in business there will be received free of taxes for several years and later will be assessed on an imaginary capital, reckoned at from five to seven times the yearly rent he pays.

TWO IOWA BROTHERS POWER IN COLOMBIA

Raised on Farms, They Now Are Powerful Figures in Finance.

ELDER IS 52 YEARS OLD

Bogota, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Two Iowa farm boys, whose only original capital was training and ambition, have pushed the American frontier 3,000 miles south to establish themselves as economic leaders of Colombia.

They are K. C. and Robert H. Parrish, born in the little town of Leon, Iowa. Their enterprises in this republic have made them powerful financial figures. But with their success they have retained the friendship and respect of a people which admires them for honest dealing.

Studied Mine Engineering.

K. C. Parrish is 54 years old; Robert is 36. The elder attended Parsons College and received the degree of mining engineer in 1901 from the Colorado School of Mines. For 3 years he prospected for mines in Colorado, California, Arizona, New Mexico and in Mexico. In 1904 he came exploring in Colombia, located three gold mines in the department of Antioquia and decided to stay.

Robert received his law degree in 1916 from the University of Iowa and practiced law with his father in Des Moines four years. Then, feeling the need of a vacation, he came to visit his brother, fell in love with Colombia and has remained ever since.

Joined in partnership, the brothers decided gold mining was too simple and turned their abilities toward other enterprises. They started modern residence development in the city of Barranquilla and took over the municipal financing, water works construction and paving of that city.

Financed Electric Plants.

They have installed and financed electric plants in various cities of the Caribbean Coast; are interested in river transportation and railroad construction; have in their alluvial gold mines of Rio Nare the largest hydraulic elevator operating in the country; in a word, are directing about ten of the most flourishing enterprises in Colombia.

"We believe the future progress of American commerce and international relations lies in Latin America," said Robert Parrish, "and we're backing up our belief."

Mascagni to Write Hymn to Bolivar

Musicians to Be Sent to Caracas for Fete in Venzuela.

Caracas, Venezuela, Nov. 8.—Pietro Mascagni, of "Cavalleria Rusticana" fame, has been commissioned to compose a hymn to Bolivar and conduct the music in Caracas. The Italian impresario, Adolfo Bracale, will take a shipload of musicians to the Venezuelan city and an opera cast that for 45 days will present the repertoire of New York, Paris, London, Berlin and Milan, with all the magnificence characteristic of these capitals.

On July 14, 1783, Simon de Bolivar, the greatest personality of the heroic age of South America, was born at Caracas, Venezuela. Before his death, at Santa Marta, Colombia, on December 17, 1830, he was hailed as the liberator of South America. He it was who drove Spain from the southern continent, whose name is perpetuated by the Republic of Bolivia and who made Peru, Colombia and Bolivia independent republics.

Next December, the centenary of her remarkable son, Venezuela proposes to honor his memory with a musical festival unique, in its magnificence. The whole thing has been planned by Gen. Juan Vicente Gomez.

Used Market Offers Many Serviceable Automobiles

Better Values Than Heretofore Available to Purchasers; Pointers for Prospective Buyers; Brakes Should Be Carefully Inspected.

By WILLIAM UHLMAN.

Just as in the new car field, where prospective purchasers are being offered the most outstanding values in motordom's history, so, too, in the used-car markets better automobiles at more alluring prices are beckoning the bidding for careful consideration and attention.

The day of the old-style used car and used-car market is definitely passing. The prospective buyer of the unusued transportation in a second-hand car more than ever before can be certain of obtaining sound and honest values if he will patronize a reliable establishment and use a reasonable amount of judgment. Venturing into the used-car market today is not fraught with the disastrous possibilities it betokened a few years ago. The entire business has been stabilized and put in order with better effect upon the industry as a whole and equal benefit to the ultimate consumer.

Despite these facts, however, the prospective purchaser can not afford to acquire a used car from any source unless he gives it a reasonably thorough and intelligent examination. This is especially necessary when one bears in mind that no two persons handle an automobile in precisely the same manner, and that no one or two general rules are sufficient to apply in all—or even one—case.

How, then, is a prospective purchaser to know when a given used car is a "good" used car? What should he look for and where? The simple answers to these questions should aid those who have planned to go into the used-car markets for their next automotive equipment.

How Old Is the Car?

First of all, it should be pointed out that the almost universal approach to the problem of choosing a used car is by way of learning in what year it was produced. Any other data discovered about the car later, even that it is in excellent mechanism, is colored by the fact that it came from the factory in this year or that.

The next question, almost invariably, relates to the mileage recorded on the odometer. Many authorities are convinced that these two considerations are given entirely too much weight in fixing the value of the automobile that is to be found in the used-car market, especially in the case of the mileage. By way of illustrating the first point, it is true in this period of many model changes, that an older car—tried and true—often is better than the first cars of a new design out of which the "bugs" had not yet been ironed.

As to using the speedometer as an indication of the car's worth, it always has been condemned by experts. For instance, A may abuse his car both in operation and maintenance. By the time it has gone 8,000 miles the bearings and wrist pins may be loose, the cylinder walls scored, the clutch wobbly, the universal joint worn, and the steering gear reeking with back-lash. B, on the other hand, gives his car real care and consideration. At 30,000 miles it is running efficiently and smoothly, the units still fit snugly and the whole car is in excellent condition.

Yet, what an edge A's car appears to have if the speedometer is the criterion!

If the merit of a used car is not to be determined through its age and its travels, how, then, can it be estimated

Exterior and Interior.

Appearance of exterior and interior finish, floor boards, dash and upholstery probably will take care of itself. Here, then, is a program for determining the condition of the many other important features that have a vital relationship to a given used car.

Drive it, or if one can not drive it, watch closely while some one else operates the car. Does it steer easily and precisely? Does the car pick up well? Are the brakes adequate to the task of bringing it quickly to a stop at all speeds? Do the springs seem dead and loggy, or resilient and alive?

These are the tests that ordinarily are made, but it takes day-in and day-out driving really to reveal the full extent of the wear in various vital units. The automobile merchant does not submit cars on 30 days' approval, so making a driving test of this character is impossible. Neither does he tear down various parts of the car to show the prospective customer just how much play there is in the universal joints, and the pistons, wear in the valves, looseness in bearings or ring gear and pinion.

Neither of these processes is necessary if the motorist will use his eyes, ears and hands.

First turn the motor over by hand. Does it turn stiffly even when thoroughly warm? Then the chances are that compression is good, with valves and piston rings in reasonably efficient condition.

Now start the motor. With the engine idling and with the hood raised make a further test of the valves as to correct adjustment and wear. Is there a tapping or clicking noise on the side of the engine where the valve gear is located, or is everything calm and quiet? The former indicates looseness which, when not excessive, is not to be condemned. If it is excessive, the noise will be a loud tap instead of a pianissimo clicking.

Metallic Slapping Tells Much.

Listen intently while the motor is being accelerated and decelerated to determine whether there has been severe wear in pistons or wrist pins. A metallic slapping will be the criterion.

How how about the bearings? Stoop down below the front fender and listen closely. If there is looseness or wear, it will be manifested in a thumping noise occurring at regular intervals.

Further driving will tend to confirm any suspicions evoked by these tests. Choose a hill that is steep without being excessively so. When the car is pulling, the valve and piston noises will incline toward acuteness and will be easily recognized because of the revelations of the first tests.

Now select a level spot to make two other telling experiments. Let the first be the condition of the clutch, whether it slips. From a low speed in high gear, accelerate gradually. Does the speedometer seem to advance in direct proportion to the pressure on the accelerator? Or, is it slower? If the latter is the case, the clutch is slipping. Usually, this is fairly obvious. Having made this test, pick up speed and suddenly let out the clutch. A noise in coasting, coming from beneath the car, will indicate a worn universal joint.

These tests, common sense, confidence in the dealer, knowledge of the fact that the used car market is a good car market, and an unwillingness to jump to conclusions, will enable the person who can not quite finance a new car to find an acceptable substitute among the trade-ins.

How many experienced motorists are confident they could pass an examination in their local and State traffic regulations?

The question recently was raised by a motor vehicle official who, in asking it, expressed the opinion that the number who would fail such a test would be amazing. His opinion was based in part upon the fact that this actually happened here several years ago when reexamination of all drivers' permit holders was required.

Other commentators on the precision with which drivers generally are familiar with the traffic regulations declare that a majority "think" they know the rules and would be as surprised as any one else to learn that actually they do not. Because one once was able to pass such a test or once made a study of the regulations is not an assurance that one knows them today.

Few enactments relating to public conduct are so frequently and broadly modified and changed as the traffic regulations or motor vehicle regulations. While the more significant ones are widely publicized when changed, they often escape the attention of the individual. There are many ways in which this is possible.

The best way to find out how much or how little one knows of the current rules and regulations is to get a copy and make a study of them. Most officials will grant that the code is rather dull and dry reading, but like so much reading that is both dull and dry it can be of exceptional value.

Uniformity among motorists in their knowledge of the regulations is quite as important as uniform regulations.

Way out in South Australia the government has gone in for psychology. It has decided that "motor taxation" is an unpopular phrase and in its stead has substituted "motor registration." The cost remains the same.

Eventually legislators will discover that there is no magic formula for making motor taxation popular. There is only one sound way to do it. That is to keep it within the bounds of reason. Motorists are willing to pay their way. They do not want to pay every one else's way at the same time.

No mystic phrase ever will change this fundamental proposition.

Minnesota's State Supreme Court has thrown further light on what constitutes negligence in driving an automobile. In a recent case it ruled that a driver who drove into an intersection with only one hand on the steering wheel, while he was operating the choke button with the other and centering his attention on the latter operation, could be held negligent. The advantage of warming up the engine before starting thus is a legal as well as mechanical one.

* * * *

Among the recent automotive patents granted by the United States Patent Office is one that covers a device which drops sand in front of the rear wheels to prevent a skid on wet pavements.

Many think it would be more plausible if some one would only invent a means of making the motorist keep the supply of sand adequate. The present device overlooks this feature.

TRADE NOTES

William D. Osgood has been appointed manager of the Washington branch of the Peerless Motor Co., succeeding R. Bruce Livie, who has been transferred to the executive staff at the home office in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Osgood for several years was engaged in retail automobile selling in this city, leaving to accept a position as zone manager in the West for one of the larger automobile manufacturers. He returned to Washington early this summer and since has been assistant to Mr. Livie at the Peerless Motor Car Co.

O. W. Rosenberry, for several years in charge of the used car department of one of the local automobile companies, has joined the sales staff of Lee D. Butler, Inc., Studebaker distributors.

Oil heated to aeroplane motor temperature, thus doing away with necessity of idling a motor to warm it up, and gasoline delivered at the rate of 75 gallons a minute is one of the developments of the Gulf Refining Co. in their aim to serve better the aeroplane industry. Mounted on a 5-ton semitrailor truck, this equipment can be moved to any part of a landing field. It is asserted that a great saving in time is accomplished by its use over present-day methods. The oil is electrically heated before the truck leaves its station, and by means of insulated tanks it will hold the heat for eighteen hours. Hot water is also carried on the same truck for use in radiators of water-cooled aeroplane motors.

An average of approximately $28.97 was spent by each motorist in this country last year for automobile tires, according to figures compiled by the American Motorists Association. The average value per tire was $8.03 and the average tube value was $1.21. Each motorist used an average of 3.04 tires and 3.09 tubes in 1929. In 1925 there were 125 manufacturers of tires and tubes, today there are less than 40.

According to C. H. Warrington, local Cord dealer, in the first six months of this year, 17.2 per cent or nearly one-fifth of all five-passenger cars selling for $3,000 or over sold in the United States were Cord front-drive cars. "This I believe is an unusual record," states Mr. Warrington, "for the Cord has only been on the market approximately twelve months, and in that time has reached fifth place in the number of cars sold in its price class."

Final figures from last year's automobile financing operations indicate that installment buyers of cars paid their obligations in a little over three-fourths of the year's time, according to C. C. Hanch, general manager of the National Association of Finance Companies. The aggregate business of the finance companies totaled almost $3,000,000,000 last year.

A business relationship that dates back to the early days of Dodge Brothers' entrance into the motor car industry has been resumed with the announcement by Robert Graham, of Graham Brothers, that C. W. Mathewson has become affiliated with their organization. When the Graham Brothers were directing their own commercial car business, afterwards merged with Dodge Brothers, Mr. Mathewson was vice president in charge of Dodge Brothers sales.

AT THE CHESS TABLE

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER

The fourth round of the current handicap tournament at the Capital City Chess Club came to a close with F. W. F. Gleason still leading the field with a score of three wins and no losses. In the games played during the past week Gleason defeated Clinton, Parsons won from Smith, and Simmons scored over Whitaker. Roberts, conceding the odds of a knight, placed his second win in the columns at the expense of Mainhall. The standing of the players to date reads:

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.
H.E.Smith.....	2	1	A.W.Whitaker .	2	3

E.J.Simmons..	2	2	G.L.Clinton ...	1	3

In the third round of the 2-man team tournament which is being conducted by the Washington Chess League, the games being played at the Capital City Club, the Bettinger-Bishop combination scored their second consecutive 2-0 victory. Bettinger won a 30 move affair from Knapp in pretty fashion, while Bishop disposed of Simmons by announcing mate in four on his seventeenth turn. The game may be found below. The winners have finished the first half of their schedule with a team score of 2 wins and 1 loss, Bishop winning 2 games and drawing 1, while Bettinger was winning 2 and losing 1. The C. A. and A. Y. Hesse pair have three unfinished games and a team score of 1 loss. The E. M. Knapp-E. J. Simmons couple have a team score of 1 loss with two games unfinished. The J. W. Byler-F. B. Walker combination has won its lone match which went to completion and has three unfinished games, as a result principally of Mr. Byler's illness. With the completion of the above games, many of which will be played off this week, the competitors will enter the second half of their double round schedule.

Notes.

The five-man team tournament which is being sponsored by the Washington Chess League is scheduled to get under way in the immediate future and a meeting was held during the week to draw up more definite plans. Any one desiring to enter a team in the event should get in touch immediately with G. E. Bishop, Capital City Chess Club, 917 Fifteenth street northwest.

The chess club in the process of formation at George Washington University has chosen Thursday evenings for its regular meeting night. Students at that institution are urged to be present this Thursday in Room 23, Corcoran Hall, at 7:30 o'clock, when an election of officers is to be held. Prospective members are requested to bring both board and chessmen, if possible, until the club's facilities have been placed on a firmer footing.

Mr. Rice Victorious.

The mere mention of the name of James Henry Rice, jr., recalls pleasant memories to many of the District's chess fans who number him as a friend. From Brick House Plantation on the Chee-ha River, Wiggins, S. C., Mr. Rice writes as follows: "The score of the appended game with Mr. W. R. Hale, of Greenville, S. C., a native of New Orleans and a Nestor of Chess, may interest you. Copy sent to Whitaker, who predicted my defeat at move 31, when Black played Kt—K2. He should not have been allowed the chance, but I had recently (September 19) had a fall on slippery steps, breaking a rib and my left arm, with various other contusions, which, you will allow, did not help my play." We join Mr. Rice's many local friends, who recall his visits of yore with satisfaction, in wishing him a speedy recovery. The game, which follows, was played by correspondence.

Notes by James Henry Rice, jr.:

(c) White pointed out at the time that 29 PxQP, giving up the queen, would win, thus: 29 PxQP, RxQ; 30 PxR, QxP (best); 31 BxQ ch, KtxB, and White should win. But the plan adopted involved no risk, and White was in a highly nervous condition from an accident, and thought best to select the text.

(e) Overlooking the win at once by P—K7. If, then: 31 P—K7, KtxP; 32 Q—K6 ch, K moves; 33 BxP and wins.

(f) The loss of a piece or the exchange follows; and the end-game is lost. The ending is neat enough, but should have come sooner, and would have, but for White's nervous condition.

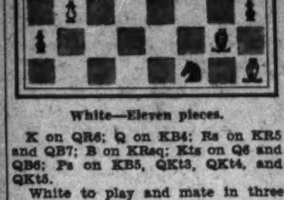
Problem No. 398.

By C. C. Bettinger, Washington, D. C.

Composed for The Post.

Black—Eleven pieces.

K on Q4; Rs on KR3 and Qsq; Bs on KKt7 and KB3; Kts on KB6 and QR4; Ps on KB6, QKt3, QR2, and QR7.



White—Eleven pieces.

K on QR6; Q on KB4; Rs on KR5 and QB7; B on KRsq; Kts on Q6 and QB6; Ps on KB5, QKt3, QKt4, and QKt5.

White to play and mate in three moves.

Solutions to Problem.

The key to No. 397 is P-Kt8 (Kt). While the idea was doubtless original to the composer, Martin C. Stark, the position has unfortunately been published before, as revealed in the solvers' comments. Among those sending in solutions were Clair J. Bressler, J. W. Harris, James W. Byler, Harvey W. Wiley, jr., Frank B. Walker, George Dantzig, C. C. Bettinger, Jacob Frech. Belated replies to No. 396 were received from Clair J. Bressler, John Alden, jr., A. Y. Hesse and J. W. Apitz.

J. W. Byler writes: "The solution to No. 397 is 1 P-Kt8 (Kt!), P-QKt4; 2 Kt-K7, KxKt (must); 3 Kt-B6 mate. There are no variations. I have seen this problem before, but can not recall whether it was published or over the board at the club. The Post's solvers are in error in saying that No. 396 by Mr. Miotkowski can be solved by 1 Q-R3ch, K-QB5; 2 P-K4; P-QKt3 or K-Q5; 3 Q-B3 mate. After 2 ..., P-QKt5, by black, white has no mate. The beauty of No. 396 is to find the second move for white after 1 P-K4, K-QB4. I prefer the position in the following form: Remove black's P at QKt2, and change white's pawn from K5 to KB4. The position would then read: White, K-Q8, Q-QR2, Ps QKt2, K3, KB3 and KB4. Black, K-QKt5, P-QKt4. (White 6 pieces; Black 2 pieces.) White to move and mate in three."

Clair J. Bressler comments: "No. 397 has only one line of play, which I found after working several hours. White's second move recalled a similar play I had previously seen, so I dug into my chess literature and found the exact position on page 215 of Edward Lasker's 'Chess and Checkers.' It is diagram 79, problem No. 3." The problem, however, is deserving of praise. J. W. Harris terms it "very pretty as well as economical." C. C. Bettinger writes: "This problem, with its charming setting, unexpected key and clever ambush play, is certainly a gem."

George Dantzig remarks, "For a long time problem 397 had me licked. I tried elimination. I failed. As I was falling asleep the solution came. I found that the unintentional solution to Problem 396 does not work, i. e., 1 Q-R3ch; 2 P-K4; 3 Q-K13 mate. This does not work for P-KB5 prevents Q from going to B3 and mating." F. B. Walker says, "No. 397 is unusual and pretty, and withal difficult."

Harvey W. Wiley, jr., writes, "The key to Martin Stark's problem is P-Kt8 (Kt). The stalemate is avoided very cleverly. I have been corresponding with Mantin, but did not know he was playing No. 1 on the university team. He is going some if he beat out Mugridge and Saron, two very good players." Incidentally Mr. Wiley has sent in a three-mover which bids fair to be of great interest to the solvers in the near future.

And here is a real bit of news for the solvers: Jacob Frech failed to find the keymove to No. 397. He writes, "If this problem has not been published as a three-moter by error, instead of a four-mover, I shall be greatly interested in learning its one or more keymoves. . . . The nearest three-move mate that I discovered is an instance of seemingly sagacious sacrifice of both white's original pieces, B and Kt, viz.: 1 B-B4; PxB; 2 P-Kt8 (Q), PxKt; 3 mate, Q-QR8. But this is not a forced mate, as black has choice of better defenses. He can safely play 2 KxKt or P-B5. If white's P were on KB7 instead of KKt7, the following would be the relevant middle term: A problem in which white can force one of the following series: 1 B-K7 or Q6, P-Kt4; 2 B-Q8 or B7, KxKt; 3 mate P-B8 (Q or B)."

Today's offering is another three-move composition of C. C. Bettinger's and we trust it will meet a better fate than a few of his recent efforts. Regarding it Bettinger comments, "This is the result of 4 hours' work Sunday. Think it is sound but will let the solvers judge."

Boy Injured by Train Drags Self Half Block

Fresno, Nov. 8.—Exhibiting heroic fortitude and with barely any complaint of his plight, 8-year-old Lawrence Mahler dragged himself half a block across a vacant lot to his home here after his left foot had been crushed off by a Santa Fe freight train.

The child is in a serious condition from shock and loss of blood, but is believed by attending physicians to have a chance for recovery.

STOCKS MAINTAIN SINKING TENDENCY

Rails' Index Reaches Lowest Level in Four Years; U. S. Steel at Bottom.

N. & W. DROPS 5 POINTS

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.). — The stock market rounded out two months of a virtually unchecked decline today with the downward movement still in evidence. Losses, however, were smaller than yesterday.

Heavy selling of the utilities sent them within 3 points of their 1929 low, as based on the averages. Rails, now indicated by the averages as the lowest in four years, once more were adjudged freely, but the industrials offered rather half-hearted resistance, chiefly in the first hour.

As it was, U. S. Steel, General Electric, Standard Oil of New Jersey and even American Can, which had been one of the few leaders to hold above the year's minimum, explored new low ground. Some covering late in the active session served to firm steel, Westinghouse and General Motors.

Prices Rally at Opening.

Wall Street was gratified at the showing made by the market in the first hour. Whether it was because yesterday's margin calls will not have to be satisfied until Monday or whether some attempts were being made to give the list organized support, prices pointed higher in the first hour when gains of 1 to 2 were well distributed.

However, the rails soon softened and the entire market followed their lead toward the middle of the session. The break coincided with a sharp decline in Cities Service on the curb. Sales totaled 2,070,760, the largest Saturday trading in several weeks.

News coming to hand at the week-end was generally unfavorable in character. Considerable importance was placed on the report of the committee on petroleum economics which suggested that the industry revise its estimates of gasoline consumption, eliminating that 7 per cent increase of October for the net six months and leaving production unchanged. The committee, in fact, recommended "a substantial reduction in operating rates" if gasoline inventories were not to exceed 45,000,000 barrels. This opinion on an admittedly unfavorable situation attracted particular attention because it followed so closely cancellation of the export price schedule, an action that leaves the way open for competitive price cutting abroad.

Radio Off 2 Points.

Radio's report of a deficit for the third quarter broke the stock 2 points to the new low of 15, although it failed to have any effect on the shares of the two large electrical manufacturers which own large blocks of Radio.

Chain store sales for October continued to show a mixture of gains and losses, but Sears Roebuck receipts were higher for the eleventh accounting period of its fiscal year, although 17.8 per cent below the comparative interval last year. Youngstown District Steel operations will be down about 2 per cent next week, according to reports from that important industrial area.

With the general market in new low ground for the past three years, the continued decline was of course disconcerting, particularly in the rails. Norfolk & Western, which had bravely stuck to its guns in the 200 class, broke to 199 on a 5-point drop. Southern Pacific at 99 was the lowest since 1927. Off 1½, Pennsylvania, touching 59½, and New York Central, off 3½, were at their lowest in some time. Atchison, Reading, Erie and Central of New Jersey were other weak spots. Union Pacific was steady.

Gillette Gains 4 Points.

Gillette displayed independent strength, moving up 4 points in response to failure of the injunction proceedings against the Auto-Strop merger. Goodyear Rubber was also firm, gaining 2 points on the report that dividends would be maintained. For the most part, losses in the industrials were small. American Can closed ½ lower, and decimes in Allied Chemical, Bethlehem Steel, Du Pont and International Harvester did not exceed 2 points. North American tumbled more than 5 to 66, which is half of its 1930 high. American Telephone & Telegraph receded to 187½, recovering only half a point. Consolidated Gas, Public Service of New Jersey and American Power & Light yielded 2.

The commodities were irregular. Wheat sagged fractionally in sympathy with the Argentine market. Corn also eased, reflecting bearish weather and large offerings. Cotton's response to the crop and ginning reports was a rally of 65 cents to $1.10 a bale net.

Continued demand for the French franc kept the quotation firm. Sterling was a shade lower.

BONDS' SOFT TREND SLACKENS SLIGHTLY

Support for Gilt-Edged List Improves; Few Rails Decline Sharply.

SOUTHERN R. R. DROPS

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Pressure against domestic bonds slackened today in the final session of the week and support for gilt-edged issues improved but the market moved irregularly lower.

The sharp reaction in bond prices on Friday resulted in some bargain hunter buying today and changes in better grade investment issues were narower and mixed. Convertibles and speculative industrials were the weakest spots in the market and a few railroad bonds were sharply lower.

Chesapeake & Ohio 4½s, St. Paul 5s of 2000, Chicago & Western Indiana 4s, Denver & Rio Grande 5s B, Erie 5s of 1967, Great Northern 4½s D and E, Louisville & Nashville 4s, Pittsburgh & West Virginia 4½s A C, St. Louis-San Francisco 4½s, and Southern Railway General 6s were under pressure.

Several Rails Hit New Lows.

Several reached new lows for the year. Seaboard issues were more active than in some time, and moved steadily lower. The 6s dipped 4 points to 24 and the adjustment 5s sold at 4, off 1¼.

Point losses were registered by many industrials that continue in disfavor as a result of adverse business conditions. Weak bonds included Crown Zellerbach 6s, Central Foundry 6s, Bush Terminal 4s, Central Steel Castings 5½s, B. F. Goodrich 6s, Keith first 6s and Pure Oil 5½s. Remington Arms sinking fund 6s, infrequently traded, touched a new high at par.

While the main body of utilities moved narrowly, American Water Works 6s, reacted 1¾ to a new year's low and New Orleans Public Service 5s A, and North American Edison 5s A were under pressure. American Telephone bonds were firm.

Warner Brothers Sink.

A 4-point decline in Warner Brothers 6s was a feature of the stock privilege group. The bonds closed at 74½, the low of the day. Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron 6s, another convertible, dipped 3 into new low ground for the year.

Liberty fourth 4¼s were well bought at the year's peak price, but the rest of the Government group was dull and slightly lower. The firmness of United States Governments during the week has been in sharp contrast with the divergent trend of domestic corporation investment securities.

The preponderance of changes in the foreign list was on the downside. German International 5½s yielded 1¼ and other German municipal and industrial issues were in supply. Finland Republic 5½s declined about a point. Realizing gave an irregular tone to South Americans. Argentine 6s, Brazil 8s, Peru 6s, and Sao Paulo 7s were lower. Bolivian 7s dipped 5 points on a few sales. Brazil governments were firm and Chile 6s were in demand.

G. W. U. WILL DEBATE SCOTTISH STUDENTS

Annual International Event Will Be Held Thursday in Corcoran Hall.

TEA IS GIVEN BY WOMEN

George Washington University will open the intercollegiate debate season on Thursday evening with its annual international debate, meeting a team from Scottish universities touring the United States under the auspices of the National Student Federation of America. The debate will take place at 8 p. m. in the assembly room in Corcoran Hall.

The question is: Resolved, that the primary function of a university is to advance the general knowledge of mankind rather than to supply cultural or vocational training. George Washington University will uphold the negative.

This will be the eighth international debate in which the university has participated in Washington, having met visiting teams from British universities in former years and, last year, a team of Chinese debaters from Harvard University. In 1926 the George Washington debaters were chosen to represent the universities of the United States abroad, and made a tour of Europe.

In Law School.

The George Washington University will be represented in the international debate by Andrew Howard and Hearst R. Duncan. Mr. Duncan and Mr. Howard are third-year students in the law school. Both have excellent scholastic records and are prominent in student affairs.

They have represented George Washington in intercollegiate debate in previous years, Mr. Howard having been debate manager last year. Both are members of Delta Sigma Rho, honorary forensic fraternity. Mr. Duncan represents the law school on the student council of the university. Mr. Duncan is a native of Iowa, where he attended Lenox College for two years prior to entering the George Washington University law school. Mr. Howard, a native of Missouri, holds the degree of bachelor of arts from Drury College.

The Scottish team is composed of John M. MacCormick, of Glasgow University, and Norman Alexander Bruce Wilson, of St. Andrews University.

Mr. MacCormick holds the degrees of A. M. and LL. B., and is now doing postgraduate work at Glasgow University. Taking a leading part in the foundation of the National party of Scotland, Mr. MacCormick was its first chairman, and is today national secretary of that organization. He was the first Nationalist parliamentary candidate to be adopted in Scotland and, while still an undergraduate, contested a Glasgow constituency. Mr. MacCormick has addressed meetings in practically every town in Scotland and is reported to be a powerful speaker.

Norman Alexander Bruce Wilson is a student of science of the United College, University of St. Andrews, and is preparing to take up research in chemistry. He has been active in student affairs at the university and is a representative of the students' council. During the past year he served as vice president of the University Parliamentary and Dialectic Club and has organized all student debates held in the university. He has also been subeditor of his college magazine and, upon his return, will take up the presidency of the university literary society.

Reception and Dance.

Last night students and alumni of the law school were guests at a reception and dance. Talks by President Cloyd Heck Marvin and by Huston Thompson, former chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, were features of the evening.

On Tuesday President Marvin will preside at the Armistice Day memorial meeting of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, at 10:30 a. m. at the Washington Auditorium. Dr. Marvin will introduce President Hoover, who is to deliver the address of the occasion.

An address by Prof. Frances Kirkpatrick on the work of the home economics department of the George Washington University, and tea served in the home economics quarters by the students, featured the meeting on Tuesday of Columbian Women of the George Washington University.

At the meeting Miss Elizabeth Peet read a tribute to Mrs. William H. Herron, prominent Washington clubwoman and civic leader, who was one of the first women to attend the George Washington University. Upon motion of Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., it was voted henceforth to designate the third Columbian Women Scholarship as the Lillian Young Herron Scholarship in memory of Mrs. Herron. Mrs. Evans spoke of the significance of the recognition of the George Washington University by the Association of American Universities.

Miss Virginia Diedel, chairman of the finance committee, announced that her committee would shortly complete plans for a benefit to be held the last part of November or the first part of December.

Mrs. Grace Ross Chamberlin, life membership chairman, announced the names of three new life members, Dorothy Ruth, Pauline Lohman and Mrs. H. A. Harding. Four new members were elected: Miss Maria Schlecta, Miss Dorothy Albert, Miss Mary Virginia Smith and Miss Clyde Roberts.

Columbus U. Frosh Choose President

Vincent A. Sheehy, Jr., Is Among Other Officers Elected by Class.

The freshman class of Columbus University Law School last week elected Vincent A. Sheehy, jr., president. Other officers were Mary A. Bibb, vice president; Ethel Murphy, secretary; John M. De Marco, treasurer, and C. Thomas Du Fief, sergeant-at-arms. The class will hold a dance in the Shoreham Hotel December 13.

Members of the Venetian Society entertainment committee for the coming year consist of George Cozens, chairman; Evelyn Smith, Thomas L. Coates, J. Alfred Calvagno and B. L. Gallagher.

It has also been decided to read papers dealing with present and past conditions of business at the meetings of the society. This work is sponsored by the newly appointed faculty advisor, Prof. Daniel Ryan.

The library of the accounting school has been joined with that of the law school, and many valuable references have been added.

The first practice session of the law school girl's swimming team will be held tomorrow night at the Ambassador Hotel pool. About twenty candidates are expected to be present.

At a meeting of the Taney Law Club last Thursday night, Prof. William A. Roberts, faculty advisor, outlined plans for a series of extemporaneous debates and open discussions.

The university will act as host to the conference at luncheon which will be served at noon in the trustees' dining room, after which the seminar will be taken on a sight-seeing tour. A dinner conference will be held at the Whitelaw at 6 o'clock, the seminar leaving for Hampton Institute at night. The tour of the seminar will extend to November 23, and will include points as far south as Atlanta and Tuskegee.

Wilson, general secretary of the student volunteer movement; Dr. John Haywood, dean of Morgan College; Dr. Z. B. Phillips, chaplain of the United States Senate; the Rev. Jason Noble Pierce, the Rev W. A. Shelton, the Rev. R. W. S. Thomas, the Rev. Moses H. Lovell, the Rev. C. T. Murray, Dr. Walter S. Ufford and Dr. William A. White.

Edna Burke and Cecie Jenkins, former Dunbar High School students, have again demonstrated leadership in scholarship, completing their work with a grade of A in every subject pursued.

CLUB PLANS DRAMATICS

The annual meeting of the American Catholic Hierarchy will be held at the Catholic University on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Over 70 members will attend the sessions, which will be held in the John K. Mullen Memorial Library, beginning at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston; Cardinal Hayes, of New York, and Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, and eight archbishops will come to the university for the occasion. The archbishops and bishops who will take part in the meetings are: Three cardinals, 8 archbishops and 60 bishops.

Arthur J. Bergman, director of athletics at the Catholic University, has announced the establishment of a new program of athletics for students in the nature of intramural sports, as distinguished from varsity or intercollegiate competition. The program will embrace all branches of athletics, and is designed to supersede eventually compulsory attendance at physical education classes and at the same time to diminish the exaggerated emphasis which it has become customary for American colleges to lay on football. General and actual participation on the part of the student body as a whole in all sports is the general aim of the new scheme. The name of the new organization is "The Department of Intramural Athletics."

For Wholesome Recreations.

Its constitution states that "it shall be the function of the department to encourage the entire student body to participate in organized athletic sports and also to encourage participation in wholesome, active recreations. The department shall, therefore, provide facilities for such competition and recreation; shall organize and promote competition between student groups and individuals, and shall foster a spirit of fair play and sportsmanship among participants and spectators. No members of a varsity team may participate in intramural contests.

The trustees will meet at the university next Tuesday. The sessions will meet at 10:30 in the morning in the Mullen Library.

The University Dramatic Club met Friday evening in Gibbons Hall and was addressed by William J. Connor, president, who outlined plans for the year. It was agreed that the first performance of the society would be three one-act plays, to be played on the campus. The second week in December was tentatively set for this affair.

Il Circolo Italiano, campus literary and social club for Italian-speaking students, elected during the week: Nicholas Z. Monaco, Newark, N. J., president; Francis G. Tigani, Wilmington, Del., vice president; Mario D. Rubbone, Long Island City, Long Island, secretary, and Ferdinand Vezzozi, Newark, N. J., treasurer.

Addressed by Diplomat.

Last year the club was addressed by a number of distinguished Italians, among whom were the Italian Ambassador, Nobile Giacome de Martino and Prof. Petronelli, a noted studnet of Italian literature.

The university branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, composed of engineering students, met on Wednesday evening in McMahon Hall. The meeting was addressed by Dr. Thomas J. MacKavanaugh, professor of electrical engineering.

The annual football dance will be held on Saturday evening, November 29. The committee in charge is made up of Michael Deving, president of the athletic association, and Walter Barney, Michael Marruci, and Hugh Flynn, presidents of the senior, junior and sophomore classes, respectively.

Leverone Addresses Hine Junior Students

The necessity of application to the study of a specialized vocation was stressed by Paul J. Leverone, president of the Columbia Technical School, in a recent address before students of the Hine Junior High School, under auspices of the vocational guidance committee of the Kiwanis Club.

Mr. Leverone pointed out that the reason for many failures is traceable to the fact that some persons at the outset of their careers waste much time in changing occupations. It is advisable to master one trade or profession before seeking other fields, Mr. Leverone said.

Saturday also marks the date for conclusion of the sorority and fraternity rush season, when rush rules will end. Elaborate plans for getting the new pledgees and the fraternities and sororities together with least embarrassment to all have been worked out and will be put into effect through "intermediaries," Dr. George B. Woods, dean of the college of liberal arts, and Miss Mary Louise Brown, dean of women.

Classes will be suspended Tuesday morning, and the students of the college with the faculty will attend in a body the exercises at the auditorium, where President Hoover will speak to the International Good Will Alliance. A section of seats has been reserved for American University.

Miss Jean Stephenson presided.

National U. Debaters In Elimination Tests

The first elimination contest for the selection of a team to compete in the first interclass debate of the current year will be held at National University Saturday night. The subject will be Philippine independence, and the tilt will be staged under the direction of Prof. Fred P. Myers, of the faculty.

Two teams argued last night over whether Congress should be given the power to override a decision of the United States Supreme Court holding a Federal statute unconstitutional. E. E. Ditto and S. E. Arto comprised the affirmative team and E. L. Keats and D. A. Martin opposed the proposal.

The Alpha Beta Phi Legal Fraternity received new members for the year at its smoker last week. The organization's guests at that time included Milton Strassburger, an honorary member, and Irvin Goldstein, assistant U. S. Attorney.

Curb Review

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Pronounced weakness in such stocks as Cities Service and Electric Bond & Share led to another outburst of general selling in the curb market today.

There was a slight rally at the close, but the list ended the day considerably lower, with the largest declines in the utilities and oils. Sales for the two hour session were 950,500 shares, larger than any full day's turnover this week.

Cities Service dropped to 16, a loss of 4½, and substantially under the 1929 low of 20. With a mild rally from the low, the stock closed at 17, a net loss of 3½.

The large blocks of stock that were offered made the session the busiest in many weeks. In addition to a 30,800 block of Cities Service sold at the opening, there were large transactions in Electric Bond & Share, American Superpower and other utilities.

Electric Bond & Share lost 3 points, net. The closing figure of 41 was only ¾ above the day's minimum and compared with the year's high of 117⅞.

The reaction carried many utilities further into new low ground for the year, including American Superpower, Central States Electric, United Gas, United Light & Power A, and Niagara Hudson Power. American Gas & Electric yielded 4⅞, one of the largest losses of the group.

The sharp break in Cities Service unsettled the whole oil group. The entire standard group reacted to new lows for the year with losses of a point or more, led by Standard of Indiana, which was the target of heavy selling. Humble sagged ¾, Gulf ½ and Missouri Kansas Pipe, a natural gas issue, reacted ⅝. Vacuum was an exception, closing ½ higher.

Industrials were neglected but were generally fractionally lower. In the investment trust group Goldman Sachs duplicated its year's low with a net loss of ⅝. Pennroad broke into new low ground in a comparatively large turnover, closing at 6⅛, a ½ point loss.

NEW YORK COTTON.

New York, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The Government crop report placing the November 1 indication at 14,438,000 bales of 500 pounds gross and the amount ginned prior to November 1 at 10,863,601 running bales, was the feature in the cotton market here today.

A lower opening was followed by rallies on prebureau covering, and after the publication of the report, prices advanced further. March contracts, which had sold off to 11.25 early and advanced to 11.42 before the report, sold up to 11.63, or 31 points above Friday's closing quotations. This advance was checked by realizing, and closing quotations showed reactions with March quoted at 11.50, but the final tone was steady at net advances of 13 to 22 points.

The opening was steady at a decline of 1 to 5 points, with the active months showing net losses of 3 to 8 points during the first few minutes in response to relatively easy Liverpool cables combined with some southern and local selling. The offerings were comparatively light, however, and were quite readily absorbed by covering and trade buying. Before trading was suspended to receive the crop figures, prices had worked about 5 to 10 points net higher.

The crop indication appeared to be below the average expectation of recent sellers and when the tending was resumed after the usual fifteen minute interval, prices advanced some $2 to 29 points from prebureau figures. New December sold up to 11.20 and May to 11.88, making net gains of 27 to 36 points on the active months, but the demand was attributed chiefly to covering while the advance met considerable realizing as well as some further selling. This was reflected by reactions of 8 to 14 points from the best, with new December closing at 11.10 and May at 11.74.

The Government report showed a decrease of only 48,000 bales in the crop indication as compared with the forecast of last month, but trade sellers appeared to have been looking for some increase in the figures as a recent canvas here showed an average expectation of 14,470,000 bales among New York Cotton Exchange members. On the other hand, the official estimate was slightly above the average of 14,368,000 bales shown by recent private reports.

ADVICE ON INVESTMENTS

By CHARLES W. STORM.

Radio Corporation.

G. B. F.—Please supply me with some facts and an opinion of Radio Corporation.

Answer—Earnings for the first six months amounted to $505,098, which was insufficient for dividend requirements on the 803,375 shares of preferred "B" stock, to say nothing of earnings for the 13,000,000 shares of common. While the last six months are always the best for the radio industry, trade conditions are such as to warrant little optimism for the common stock, which must be considered highly speculative, as no dividends have ever been paid on it.

Two Stocks.

H. J. B.—Kindly give me the benefit of your expert knowledge on securities and investments, relative in particular to shares of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co., of New York City, and Prairie Pipe Line, of Independence, Kans. At present market do you consider the shares of one or both companies as a good investment?

Answer—Even though the income yield on Title Guarantee & Trust from the regular annual dividend of $4.80 a share is not large, the stock possesses considerable investment appeal at prevailing prices, especially in view of the fact that besides the regular dividends, $2.40 per share extra has been disbursed thus far in 1930, while in 1929 dividends amounted to $10.40 a share, including $3 paid on the old $100 par stock prior to the 5-for-1 split up, besides which $1.20 a share extra was distributed.

Notwithstanding its present extremely low price, which would seem to cause some doubt as to its stability, Prairie Pipe Line looks rather tempting from an investment viewpoint, in consideration of the company's splendid dividend record and the fact that earnings for this year, despite the lean period, give every indication that present dividends will be maintained. In 1929 earnings on stock amounted to $5.53 a share. Earnings for full year 1930 are estimated at $5 per share. Dividends being paid in cash are $3 regular and $2 extra; besides these distributions, a 25 per cent stock dividend was disbursed in 1929. Actual net income for first half of current year equaled $2.60 a share, or more than enough to cover the regular and extra dividends for the period.

Thermoid—Cord.

W. M. T.—Please give me some information regarding Thermoid Co. and the Cord Corporation. Would you consider these stocks at their present prices good buys for long-term holding?

Answer—Thermoid common, which on August 1 last passed its dividend, and Cord Corporation, on which no dividend has ever been paid, can only be regarded as highly speculative and therefore not worthy of consideration from an investment viewpoint. Thermoid preferred, on which quarterly dividends of $1.75 a share continue to be paid, possesses some degree of attractiveness on that account, especially as the dividend is being earned. However, there are innumerable other preferred issues the purchase of which would be advised in preference to that of Thermoid. Many such issues are referred to from time to time in this column.

Missouri Pacific.

R. B.—Please give me some information regarding Missouri Pacific common and preferred.

Answer—Earnings on the common stock this year are estimated at about $5 a share, although the issue is selling around 40. The preferred, quoted around 100, has a good margin of safety over the $5 annual disbursement. It is expected that the preferred will pay another $1.50 a share this year on account of the $48 a share dividend arrearage.

Recent heavy selling of the Van Sweringen controlled stocks has brought the Missouri Pacific issues down considerably. Net operating income of the Missouri Pacific for the first nine months, with the exception of the 1929 period, was the highest on record for the road in recent years.

The Wisconsin Steel Co. has blown out one of its two remaining active blast furnaces. There are now fourteen of the thirty-six stacks in the Chicago district active.

G. A. Brockway has been elected chairman of the board of the Brockway Motor Truck Corporation. Robert F. Black has been elected president and a director.

An additional 30 days have been added to the period during which holders of New Jersey Power & Light Co. 5 per cent first mortgage gold bonds, due in 1956, may exchange their bonds at 105 for the 4½ per cent series, due 1960, at 101.50, with adjustment for fractions and accrued interest. The new expiration date of the offer is December 7.

A special meeting of stockholders of G. R. Kinney Co., Inc., has been called for December, to vote on a proposal to reduce the authorized preferred stock to 66,000 shares from 80,000. The outstanding preferred will not be affected, as only 51,000 shares, par value $100, have been issued.

Dow, Jones & Co. reports a preliminary estimate indicates October gross of the Burlington Railroad will be approximately $13,197,000, against actual gross in October last year of $16,168,779, a decrease of slightly more than 18 per cent, but a gain of about 3 per cent over gross of $12,847,311 in September this year.

While here and there reports indicated that a little improvement in the volume of buying of certain qualities of steel was noted, especially railroad and construction grades, the general consuming interest in the market during the week was again light. Evidence of this was in the fact that mill production was reduced further. There was unsettlement in the price group again, with scrap material reported weak. Pig iron was somewhat easier in the Southern markets. The market locally was very quiet and new inquiries were confined to small lots. Foreign demand for copper continues active, with sales abroad thus far in November estimated at 30,000 tons. Domestic consumers have also been purchasing fair quantities, demand being still influenced by continued discussions of curtailment proposals by producers.

PASSION PLAYERS DIVIDE $500,000

Oberammergau Gross Receipts on Play Total About $1,250,000.

LEAD ACTORS GET $250

Oberammergau, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—With gross receipts of about $1,250,000, this year's Passion Play showed net profits of about $500,000. This sum has been divided among 1,156 persons.

Leading actors in the play drew about $250 each, and other helpers smaller sums, ranging down to $10 or $15 for each of the 300 youngsters with "walking on" parts. The play had 102 speaking parts.

The remuneration covered 79 performances and months of rehearsals; the musical part alone was rehearsed about 300 times prior to the first performance.

Old Jacob Rutz, Anton Lang's father-in-law, was the patriarch of the play. He has never missed a part in it since he was a child in 1850.

The soul-gripping appeal of the age-old story has not waned. Women and men, too—wept freely at times and no fewer than 2,000 persons fainted or became hysterical as the great stirring drama of Christianity unfolded itself to the eye. Those who were thus overcome by emotion were taken care of by a staff of nurses.

In 1934 it will be 300 years since the Passion Play was first performed. The villagers favor commemorating the event by a religious celebration only.

Canoeist to Cover Marquette Route

Librarian Retraces Course in Five Summers With His Son.

Special to The Washington Post.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Nov. 8.—An ambitious plan to retrace, in five summers, the path of Father Marquette through the Great Lakes and Canadian rivers by canoe was outlined here this week by Samuel Ranck, Grand Rapids (Mich.) city librarian. Mr. Ranck arranged with outfitters at the Canadian Sault to supply canoes and equipment and Indian guides for a part of the journeys.

"This north country is the most fascinating in North America to me," said Mr. Ranck, who claims to have been "knocking about in a canoe" almost ever since he was born on a dam site on the Conestoga River in Pennsylvania. "I envy Father Marquette and the other early explorers their travels in the virgin wilderness.

"Of course, my trip will be a picnic compared with that of Father Marquette. For him there were no provisioning stations; the rivers were untamed and the Indians were wild. I am sure I shall experience a lot of that feeling which must have come to him. That is the sole purpose of my proposed expeditions."

Mr. Ranck expects to have his son, Wilson, now a senior in the University of Michigan, as his companion on the canoe trips.

Druggist Celebrates; Plays 62 Holes at 62

Denver, Nov. 8.—If you still are on the sprightlier side of 40, it may be nothing out of the ordinary to celebrate your birthday by shooting one hole of golf for each year you have been in this world. But when one reaches 62, matching each year with a hole of golf takes on the earmarks of a feat.

Not, however, that George C. Curtis, Denver druggist, so regards it. He was nonchalant to the point of lighting a cigarette when, in the fast-falling twilight, he rammed home his sixty-second successful putt. Playing 62 holes of golf, he decided, would be the most fitting way to observe his birthday.

Woman, 75, Shoots Man in Fence Row

Neighbor Peppered With Squirrel Shot in Row Over Property.

Special to The Washington Post.

Huntsville, Ala., Nov. 8.—A quarrel as ancient as man—the old question, "where to put the fence"—resulted in the peppering of Hugh Vandiver, 47, with squirrel shot from a shotgun in the hands of a woman, 75, who is in jail on a charge of assault with intent to murder.

The trouble started, Vandiver told officers, when he ordered the building of a fence between the Vandiver and Wilburn property.

As the workmen were digging the holes, Mrs. Vinie Reed Wilburn, 75, owner of the adjoining property, protested that some of her land was being taken in by the proposed fence. Vandiver said if Mrs. Wilburn did not like it she could take the matter to court.

He told police that the woman then retired from the scene muttering that she didn't like courts. A moment later she reappeared on her front porch, witnesses said, and fired the shotgun in the direction of Vandiver. He went down and at the hospital 41 shots were taken from his body and limbs. His condition is not serious, attendants said.

Indo-China Coal in France.

Havre, France, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—A cargo of coal from Indo-China, 2,990 tons, arrived here as first installment of a contract of 25,000 tons of anthracite to be delivered at less cost than British coal.

Hungarian's Industry Gains.

Budapest, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—The Hungarian National Record office announces that the total output of the country's industry was $500,000,000, an increase of 1.7 per cent in a year.

7 FURNITURE DAYS

Things happened during the first six days of the Seven Furniture Days. We sold more furniture in those six days than we have ever done in a corresponding period of time. This in spite of the fact that there were two days of inclement weather to go up against.

We sold more Living Room Suites. One of the best sellers was the 2-pc. Charles of London Suite at $98.50.

We sold more occasional Tables. You'd have to do some tall counting to total the number of tables at $7.50 that left here.

We sold more Bedroom Suites. Outstanding was the 4-pc. Suite at $148.

We sold more Bed Davenports. Scores of them are now in Washington homes. The one at $61 sold particularly well.

We sold more Sofas. The Lawson Sofa at $39.50 had many, many takers.

We sold more Dining Room Suites. We'll bet that someone in your neighborhood bought the 10-pc. suite at $148.

We sold more separate Chairs. When you offer a Down Cushion Chair for $19.50 you are bound to be popular. We were.

We sold more Secretary Desks. "I'm buying it for Christmas," said a customer as she had the secretary at $39.50 sent home.

We sold more bed outfits. Especially the Poster Bed Group at $25. Record selling speaks for itself.

These are only a few of the high lights. The same spirit of buying went on all through the Furniture Department. Monday ends the Seven Furniture Days. All these savings, in addition to hundreds more, await you. The "cream of the crop" . . . representing some of the best furniture values obtainable today.

ON WHAT IS NEEDED TO BRING BIGGER AND BETTER PICTURES

By NELSON B. BELL

IT would be interesting if some inquisitive observer, with a passion for useless occupation and unnecessary worry, should compile a statistical statement setting forth the probable total sum of the dentists' bills occasioned these past few months by the gnashing of critical teeth over the failure of the motion picture industry to evolve an individual and a distinctive technique exclusively its own. I dare say the enamel has been ground off an impressive and uncounted number of molars in grim remonstrance at this palpable failure of a dilatory art, business, racket or whatever it is, to provide itself with a narrative form better adapted to its needs than the borrowed formulae and pilfered processes of the stage.

From Mr. Charles Spencer Chaplin and Welford Beaton, who are certain in their own minds that the talking screen is never going to amount to much, through the list of thoughtful commentators to Mr. Richard Watts, jr., of the New York Herald Tribune, who thinks that perhaps sometime it may, there has been universal and constant lamentation that the celluloids are too lazy to do a little looking about in the matter of their own higher destiny.

What with such films as "Married in Hollywood," "Why Leave Home," "All Quiet On the Western Front," "Monte Carlo" and various others, that never could have been anything else but motion pictures, happening along from time to time, it has seemed to me that all of this deep concern over the shortcomings of the screen and its supposed failure to convert itself into a perfect medium of expression might, after all, be just a shade premature.

I have been chided no little for my optimism, but last Monday night it was completely and magnificently justified.

* * * *

BEGINNING at midnight last Monday, a small company of invited guests sat for two and one-half hours in silent and—I admit it frankly—awed admiration of one of the most extraordinary accomplishments in the history of motion pictures. A stupendous undertaking has been successfully and miraculously executed in Raoul Walsh's production of "The Big Trail."

Here is a picture that glorifies the highest traditions of the erstwhile silent drama by presenting a sweep and magnitude of scene that have never been surpassed, and a degree of photographic beauty that has never been excelled, if ever equaled. By some secret wizardry, Walsh has been successful, no matter what the dimensions of his panorama, in keeping the movement of his epic drama constantly alive with foreground, middle distance and background action, involving hundreds of people, thousands of animals and occasionally whole tribes of Indians.

Although the topography of the terrain traversed in the long trek from Missouri to the Puget Sound country is made to appear to mark the gradual progress of the caravan from the plains through the foothills to the high mountain country of the Far West, the cameramen have not been content to take flat shots of the scenery that spread itself out before them. Their cameras evidently were loaded exclusively with panchromatic film that caught cloud and sunset effects, as well as close-up and distance shots, with an amplification rather than any diminution of the natural beauty of the scene.

To all of this visual splendor have been added the audible evidences of actuality in the voices of the humans, the whinnying of the horses, the shrill war shrieks of the redskins, the rattle and the rumble of the covered wagons, the thundering of the buffalo herds and the clatter of ponies' hoofs, the angry snarl of vicious winds, the swirl of rushing waters, the crack of rifles and six-guns, the songs of the pilgrims and the anguished turmoil of battle.

The cacaphony is one that no stage but nature's could reproduce. The drama extends as far as the eye can see—over mountains, through ravines, across raging rivers and through impenetrable forests—not always with the vividness that might be possible in a less heroic setting, but unfailingly with an epic grandeur that drives home the immensity of the thing these simple folk were doing in carrying a frontier across a continent and the unfaltering determination with which they were doing it in the face of every discouragement, every hardship and every danger that beasts of the wilderness, angry elements and a crafty enemy could throw across their path.

* * * *

APART from the comparatively trivial story of love and villainy with which the larger narrative is threaded together, there manifests itself without cessation or interruption the sublime heroism of a pioneer spirit that burned with a fervor that no power but death could quench.

It is a marvelous thing that a company of hired actors could be made to create so completely the illusion of colossal physical exertion and the overcoming of so many seemingly insuperable obstacles by sheer power of sinew as has here been done. There is no faking and no subterfuge in the approach to, or the execution of, any of the primitive tasks that would confront a wagon train penetrating virgin mountain country for the first time. When it becomes necessary to ford a deep, swift river, that deep, swift river is forded whether some of the wagons, a few of the horses and several of the settlers are washed down stream at the risk of their lives or not. If the descent of a sheer precipice into the valley below by means of crudely constructed block and tackle is necessary to continue the onward march, the whole back-breaking business is performed no less fully and no less arduously than it was probably done by those who actually made that first historic pilgrimage over the Oregon Trail almost 100 years ago.

Both are of truly epic proportions and of inestimable value as historical documents without regard to any consideration of commercialized theatrical entertainment.

* * * *

AS one studies the succession of mammoth scenes from which Raoul Walsh has fashioned his most pretentious and his most genuinely distinguished directorial effort, the larger the property men bulk as important figures in the successful production of the picture.

The impedimenta of the transcontinental wagon train was no less than staggering and to the layman who never made any such trip under conditions even remotely approximating those pictured it seems inconceivable that every requirement of convincing realism should have been anticipated and no essential detail omitted.

There happens to have come to my knowledge by merest accident some inkling of how this completeness of detail was managed. I have heard from a friend who knows him, of a young man whose familiarity with the Jackson Hole country was of some repute. Long before the shooting of "The Big Trail" was begun he was commissioned to make provision for the outfitting of such an expedition as would be necessary to fulfill the requirements of the picture.

Months of research and preparation were, of course, required before the actual business of accumulating the needed "properties" could be intelligently begun. Once that arduous task was started there seemed to be no end to it and no place to stop. In course of time, however, it was deemed completed. Mr. Walsh and his producers seemed satisfied. The deal was considered consummated and the young man was paid off in full for his time, effort and specialized knowledge, without which the other two would have been superfluous. It was not until some time afterward that this young man confided to his father that he thought he would take it easy for a while, since he was fairly well fixed for life.

His fee for services rendered had been the modest sum of $75,000!

The point, then, seems to be that the realization of the highest potentialities of the talking screen apparently is dependent upon intention more than upon any other factor. The will to make better pictures than have ever been made before, the thoughtful preparation of plans for such an expansive enterprise and the judicious expenditure of money to make those plans come true would seem to solve the puzzle that has been perplexing so many people so seriously since the photographing of stage plays has become a habit. It can be done. "The Big Trail" proves it—as you shall see, come Friday.

ZILAHY DRAMA CONVERTED TO HUSTON'S USE

Walter Huston and Kay Francis head the cast of "The Virtuous Sin" now on view at Loew's Palace Theater. Kenneth MacKenna, Jobyna Howland and Paul Cavanagh have the chief supporting roles in this drama by Lajos Zilahy, which was wildly acclaimed during its run at the National Theater in Budapest.

The story has the Russian frontier during the World War as its background and concerns the doings of a woman who sacrificed herself to a general in order to relieve her husband of military servitude.

On the stage, Roy Cummings is the guest master of ceremonies in a presentation titled "Nightingale Melodies." Several well-known headline vaudeville acts appear on the stage program with Cummings.

Many are the unproduced plays which today lie at the bottom of trunks, forgotten and beyond all hope of ever being glimpsed across the footlights.

Few are the occasions when such pieces of work are dragged out after a number of years in their "literary cemetery," to become sensational successes. The case of Lajos Zilahy's play, "The General," which has been made into "The Virtuous Sin," current at Loew's Palace, is an example of one of those rare resurrections.

Last season, 10 years after it was first written, the author pulled the play from its dusty storage place, rewrote parts of it, and was delighted to hear it acclaimed a masterpiece of modern playwrighting, after its presentation in Budapest.

So successful was the play that Paramount acquired the talking picture rights to the drama and it is offered as "The Virtuous Sin," with Kay Francis, Walter Huston and Kenneth MacKenna in the leading roles.

Zilahy began writing as a result of a serious wound sustained in the World War. Had it not been for this wound he would today be a lawyer.

His legal education to follow the footsteps of his father was interrupted when Hungary entered the war. He was sent to the Russian front as an officer. After several years of desperate fighting and exposure, he was badly wounded and for months lay in a Budapest hospital.

ACTOR WARNED ABOUT HAIRCUT

John T. Murray, who plays the fussy Mr. Calloway in Pathe's "Night Work," starring Eddie Quillan, started his theatrical career in Montreal with an English musical comedy company called "Three Little Maids." His salary was $35 a week, but he never got it. Instead he got a lot of stage philosophy and advice.

One day John went to the manager of the show, a pompous old showman of the old school, and asked for 50 cents.

"Fifty cents!" ejaculated the old fellow. "What in heaven's name do you want with 50 cents?"

"I want to get my hair cut," explained John.

"Tell me, son——," sparred the manager, "What do you intend to follow for a career?"

"I want to be an actor."

"Well," advised the boss, "if you want to be a good actor, never get your hair cut!"

FORMER STAGE MYSTERY WILL SURELY THRILL

A breathless quality of suspense pervades "The Cat Creeps," the Universal mystery drama which is now playing at the Rialto Theater. The very atmosphere is heavy with dread, and there are many hair-raising moments when the auditor feels impelled to relieve pent-up emotions with a lusty shriek.

This story was adapted from the famous stage "thriller," "The Cat and the Canary," and on the screen it is even more effective than it was on the stage, where it has long been recognized as one of the most spine-tingling plays ever written.

A great cast interprets the screen production, with Helen Twelvetrees bringing her blonde beauty and her concededly powerful histrionic talent to the principal feminine role. Appearing opposite her is Raymond Hackett, who contributes an altogether pleasing performance as Paul, a young man who is just a little bit afraid of ghosts in spite of himself. Jean Hersholt and Montagu Love enact their roles with the forceful artistry for which they are well known, and a bright spot is added to the picture by the blase wise-cracking of the irresponsible Lilyan Tashman.

Other capable performances are given by Lawrence Grant, Theodore Von Eltz, Blanche Frederici and Elizabeth Patterson.

The entire story of "The Cat Creeps" is laid within a gloomy mansion which has not been occupied for twenty years, but to which a group of relatives have been summoned at midnight to listen to the reading of the will of its former eccentric owner. The sinister reputation of the house is fully borne out by the terrifying events of the night, culminating in the mysterious murder of one of the guests—a mystery that is only solved after several hours of terror.

Rounding out the program are the Universal Newsreel, several selected short subjects and the organ, presided over by Otto F. Beck.

SECOND BEACH MELODRAMA IS R-K-O FEATURE

Drama, that portrayal by action of the things that make up the struggles of life, is given its most vivid picturization in "The Silver Horde," Radio Pictures' red-blooded, outdoor romance of the North, which is the feature at R-K-O Keith's. Thousands who have read, enjoyed and thrilled to this romantic novel by Rex Beach will find new thrills, drama and action in the talking screen version.

From the opening scenes where Joel McRea and Raymond Hatton fight their way through the frozen North to the final sequences where Evelyn Brent and Jean Arthur fight for the love of their man, the story is complete in its pathos, romance and drama—and comedy, too.

Time and expense apparently were ignored in its production. This tremendous, sweeping action is given appropriate backgrounds by cinematographers who captured all the majesty of Alaska's scenery and the man-made beauty of metropolitan scenes.

The story moves from the frozen wastelands to fishing villages into an American metropolis and back again.

Three terrific fights are staged with telling effect. One of them involves many boats and many men. Another, between Joel McRea and Ivan Linow, is one of the most spectacularly exciting man-to-man encounters ever staged for a motion picture.

The terrific struggle of Rex Beach's famous characters is brought for the first time to the talking screen in a gripping and fascinating manner with Evelyn Brent, Louis Wolheim, Joel McRea, Raymond Hatton, Jean Arthur, Blanche Sweet and Gavin Gordon in the leading roles.

Briefly, the story concerns Boyd Emerson and Fraser, who after a long trek through the snows, are refused shelter at a dwelling in an Alaskan fishing settlement. Balt, huge brute-like man, bars the entrance to the home of Cherry Malotte, notorious proprietress of a chain of honky-tonks. Emerson thrashes Balt and is admitted.

Cherry takes a liking to Emerson and explains that the local fishery is owned by a Seattle capitalist, Frederick Marsh, who has ordered that strangers be kept away at all costs. Balt had been run out of business by Marsh and the big fellow is determined to take an early opportunity to kill him.

The denouement is reserved for those who will enjoy seeing the picture.

Supplementary short reels round out.

Dorothy's Forte.

THAT FOREIGN LEGION AGAIN SPICES DRAMA

The legion is here. "Renegades," Warner Baxter's latest feature vehicle for Fox Movietone, now at the Fox, gives a vivid portrayal of life in that famous organization, the French Foreign Legion, refuge of the world's most picturesque adventurers. Victor Fleming directed.

Four comrades—a French officer fleeing from the specters of the past, a burly German, an aristocratic Russian and a hard-boiled American—none of them a credit to his country—all hiding the bitter memories that drove them into the last refuge, the French Foreign Legion—these are the renegades.

In the picture the adventures of this unusual quartet and their joint battle with the treacherous woman spy who betrayed their leader form the plot on which a strikingly vivid and breathless portrayal of legion life has been based.

Warner Baxter is the star in "Renegades," and Noah Beery, Gregory Gaye and George Cooper are his companions. Myrna Loy is the woman in the case. C. Henry Gordon, regarded as one of the screen's outstanding "finds," gives a remarkable portrayal as the legion commander.

"Renegades" is a picture marked by realism and swift action.

The Fanchon and Marco "City Service" idea is the stage feature. Included in this "idea" are Shapiro and O'Malley, knock-about comedians; Sam Hearn, "that political fellow;" Laddie La Monte, "syncopated fireman;" Seb Meza, talented dancer; De Quincey and Stanley, "big and little surprise package;" Frank Sterlin, "new notes and blue notes," and the Sun-kist Ensemble, sensational tap artists.

Leon Brusiloff and the Fox Music Masters are presenting an unusually attractive overture, featuring Senorita Maria Eater Pacheco, niece of Senor Juan B. Chevalier, Secretary of the Legation of Panama. This beautiful and attractive cantatrice will be heard in a number of songs of her native Panama.

The latest issue of Fox Movietone News rounds out the program.

A SUCCESSOR TO GREATEST HAIR-RAISER

Harold Lloyd's latest production, "Feet First," is expected to arouse more comment than any picture made in years. It is the most sensational production the bespectacled comedian has turned out since "Safety Last," and from all accounts tops even the nerve-wrecking thrills of that great picture.

Clinging by an eyebrow from an awning ten or eleven stories above the street, is not new business for Lloyd, but it is none the less dangerous while being productive of entertainment.

The comedian loves to get away from the prosaic in laughs, and in "Feet First," a title that is most appropriate, by the way, he does his stuff in a most unorthodox fashion.

"Feet First" really begins where "Safety Last" left off, in a thrill sense. Lloyd thought it would be impossible to top the spine-tingling product of seven years ago, but he reckoned without his own imagination, and his own physical prowess, for in this instance genius is a combination of brain matter and physique. The average human would stand about three days of the wear and tear the system undergoes in making a picture like "Feet First" and then apply for a cot in a hospital.

A JERSEY CITY GIRL FROM BROOKLYN CHATS A LITTLE

By WARREN NOLAN.

NEW YORK.—Miss Norma Talmadge, born in Jersey City, educated at Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn, and successively the pride of Vitagraph, Triangle, First National and United Artists, has been in our town for a spell, seeing the shows, talking to Arthur Hopkins about her next movie, contemplating the probable future of her "DuBarry" film, and otherwise enjoying herself.

Miss Talmadge discloses that Mr. Hopkins, the gentleman who gave the stage "What Price Glory," "The Hairy Ape," "Torch Song," "Machinal" and other plays of superior interest and quality, will hie himself from his Great Neck manor to a Beverly Hills hostelry long enough to produce and direct the next Norma Talmadge talking film. Right now Mr. Hopkins would like to see the lady do a light story, a comedy of manners; but Miss Talmadge is hopeful a sufficiently intense and emotional drama may be concocted or discovered, since she would like to tackle something heavy. She liked "Torch Song" and "The Greeks Had a Word For It," and would have been happy to film either, different as they are.

Very much awake and alive, the star of the Rivoli feature tosses off various and sundry comments. What ever happened to Renee Adoree, who was so marvelous in "The Big Parade?" Maybe Florence Vidor and Jascha Heifetz could be induced to do a picture together, and wouldn't they be swell in "Sacred and Profane Love?" They have bullfights in Spain. "I saw a bullfight there." They have beds and doctors ready, they go into chapels and pray, and then they go out and throw the bull; it's all terrifying and terrible. At a fashionable coutourier's shop in Paris they have a bar where the drinks are free; so the men go there and order up on the house while the ladies order up on the men. They don't like some American talkies over there. All Spain was waiting for Tibbett's picture; they go in strong for musical pictures there.

What'll happen when Chaplin brings out "City Lights?" Say, Lilyan Tashman is marvelous to work with; she was here in New York a short while ago, wasn't she? "You know, I have a habit of looking in the ice box at night and sighing over the food that'll go to waste unless it's eaten. And one wealthy man I know always rushes you out of a taxi, although he spends fortunes in other ways." Mrs. Talmadge—Peg to all her daughters—once bought two pianos for $7,000, and then told her daughters they were crazy to pay all that money for meals in hotels when they could eat in Childs'. "Everybody has some kind of economy."

Shows? Every night a different one. "I liked nearly all of them." "Mr. Gilhooley" she liked, and she thought Greta Garbo could get away with it in the movies, but nobody else could carry anything so drab. Great admirer of Garbo's. Now about these talkies. "We all start flat, even, all over again. Nobody means anything, and the pictures have to be good ones now." She thinks the movie stars hold their own pretty well. Say, how's that Banky-La Rocque show? They say it's swell. "Vilma really would like to sit home and cook and sew; that's not phoney; it's the truth. Isn't she a lovely thing?"

No, she didn't see Sidney Franklin, the Brooklyn bullfighter, in Spain. But he was gored while she was there, she read in the papers. And another thing, there are too many dialects in Spain for any one to hope to make Spanish talking pictures in Hollywood that will hit everybody there. Sure, they have lots of silent picture houses over there, but only in England do they like mystery films; not on the continent. Paris and Berlin are turning out talkies in their own languages, and there's much talk about Jannings' "Blue Angel."

The Heifetzes have the most beautiful apartment here in New York that the lady has ever seen. "And she is dying to get back to Hollywood to fit up her bedroom, because the color scheme of it at the moment has been haunting her for weeks. "I'm awfully anxious to see what Mary (Pickford) does with 'Kiki,' because I loved doing that part myself. I wanted to see Ed Wynn's show—I adore him and Jimmie Durante; I used to go to that night club again and again and just look and listen to that Durante—but me, Madame X from out-of-town, asking for tickets three weeks after the show had closed!"

Flashes.—Quick changes. Dot-dash talk, alert, popping, shifting, eager. Everybody had a good time. Madame DuBarry sat on a hotel couch and talked about Flatbush and Paris and lots of things.

FILM COMEDY AND PEPPERY STAGE STARS

"Love In the Rough," a comedy of love on the fairway, and Tom Patricola are the leading lights of the screen and stage show at Warner Bros. Earle Theater this week.

Robert Montgomery, Dorothy Jordan, Benny Rubin and Dorothy McNulty have the leading roles in "Love In the Rough," the romance of a young shipping clerk whose ability on the fairway is not limited just to golf. What this young man does with his spare time and how he manages to win for himself a young heiress is only a small part of the story. Rubin, as Montgomery's friend, is said to have one of the funniest roles of his career. "Love In the Rough," adapted from Vincent Lawrence's comedy, "Spring Cleaning," was directed by Charles F. Reisner.

Tom Patricola, known as "The Dancing Fool," heads the stage proceedings. Tom, who for the past six seasons has been leading dancing and comedy star of George White's "Scandals," comes here direct from his Hollywood engagement where he appeared in several motion pictures. Assisted by the Pearl Twins, Patricola is said to offer his usual startling singing, dancing and comedy presentation.

The Brox Sisters, well known harmony trio of stage and screen, also appear on this program. This trio of singers have been much in demand since their exceptional work in "Broadway Melody" and other photoplays. Willie, West and McGinty comedy builders and wreckers; Carlton Emmy and his Merry Wags and other attractions round out the entertainment.

There's a new appliance on the beauty market, which comes in the form of a miniature hose to be attached to the faucet of your bathroom basin. It contains a fine spray arrangement which is guaranteed to give renewed life to the tissues of your face and neck.

Adopted from the nature treatment received when one walks in the mist, the mechanical idea also gives the feeling of the spray of stinging water one receives when riding a surfboard behind a motor boat.

While on location at the Lake Norconian Club in connection with her screen role in "Love In the Rough," Dorothy Jordan received the original beauty treatment from which the other was adopted, while riding a surfboard. Not that it matters.

WINNIE COMES BACK TO MAKE SECOND START

Winnie Lightner, whose latest comedy, "The Life of the Party," met with such highly amusing responses at the Earle Theater several weeks ago, is back again in a downtown theater, where her latest Warner Bros. and Vitaphone picture is again being shown. This time Winnie holds forth from the screen of the Metropolitan.

"The Life of the Party," done entirely in Technicolor, is the legitimate successor to "Gold Diggers of Broadway," which skyrocketed Winnie to stardom. After all, these months Winnie again appears as a wild and woolly golddigger. This time she is the manager of Irene Delroy, whom she coerces into becoming a widow in order to land millionaires. But it was necessary to have clothes for this purpose and the way these girls get the apparel out of a modiste is one of the funniest parts of the picture.

Supporting Winnie and Miss Delroy are Charles Judels and Jack Whiting.

The surrounding program is made up of the Vitaphone Variety, "Believe It or Not," the Vitaphone comedy, "Mr. Intruder," and the Graham McNamee Reporter Newsreel.

That portion of the public that finds its entertainment exclusively at motion pictures is forever asking, "When will Winnie Lightner do a new one?" All they know of her is that she has suddenly emerged as the cleverest comedienne so far developed by the talking screen.

Although she is just recently becoming known to film fans, Winnie Lightner is by no means unknown to the patrons of vaudeville and musical comedy. As a matter of fact, she has been a headliner on the variety stage for many years and has been featured in several Broadway revues.

Going back to the logical first chapter of her biography, Winnie was born in Greenport, Long Island. She was, however, brought up by an uncle who lived in Buffalo, and when she decided to become a singer of what she hoped to be very serious songs she eagerly accepted a chance to appear at Shay's Theater in that city.

The first day of her booking, a particularly violent rainstorm delayed her arrival backstage. The result was that she had no time to change her clothes, but went on just as she was—a little breathless and considerably spattered with mud. Before her ten minutes were up Winnie had definitely decided to be a comedienne.

Stage Presentations of Interest

FOOTLIGHTS AND SHADOWS

—By JOHN J. DALY—

WHAT promised to be just an ordinary season takes on a look of mighty importance—and all of a sudden. The theater on the banks of the Potomac held its head mighty high last week when Mr. David Belasco brought in his 375th contribution to the arts, the play that starred Helen Gahagan—though it was probably Miss Gahagan who really starred the play. "Tonight or Never" would have been just an ordinary piece of dramatic fare without the exquisite beauty and flamboyant talents of one who is undoubtedly the outstanding young actress on the American stage.

* * * *

NOW comes another premiere to the boards of the Belasco—so that Mr. Stoddard Taylor will have to get out his high silk hat, and Mr. Lane, too, the gentleman who takes the tickets at the entrance way.

Gilbert Miller, a producer who once wrestled for supremacy with older heads, and got the decision, is bringing over from Paris for its American premiere the latest work of Marcel Pagnon, who wrote "Topaze."

The new play is called "Marseilles." It will get under way in the Belasco Theater tomorrow night. Its cast is really a distinguished one, numbering on its roster some of the finest players in the theater. There is, for instance, that Irishman of brilliant personality, Mr. Dudley Digges. Alison Skipworth is also featured.

Sidney Howard, who wrote "They Knew What They Wanted," a Pulitzer prize play some years back, is responsible for the adaptation of "Marseilles." It is said to be a tale of youth on the quays of the old Mediterranean town, a south of France seaport, where the author spent his youth. So he knows, or should know, whereof he writes. A year's run in Paris proves the play to be something worth-while, if French tastes and American tastes can in any way be reconciled.

MR. GEORGE M. COHAN will come dancing into the National Theater tomorrow night, carrying under his graying locks the eternal spirit of boyhood. It has been Washington's good fortune to see Mr. Cohan in nearly all his productions and in most of his theatrical activities—from the time he was a song and dance man until now, when he occupies a position of eminence in the theater.

The talents of George M. Cohan are many and mighty. Some one some day will probably enumerate all the Cohan activities and the list will be startling. The man seems to have no limitations. He is good at whatever he sets his hand to and he hesitates, seemingly, at nothing—at least, nothing that spells theater.

Was a time when all the good folk of the town crowded the National Theater to see "George Washington, jr.," and such concoctions that came from the pen of Mr. Cohan—who usually led his own musical comedies. Those were the days when George M. was known as a flag waver; the days when any show could be saved by the simple expedient of waving the American flag. It should be set down right here and now that no George M. Cohan show had to be saved by waving the flag; merely that the flags were waved in the early Cohan shows—and how!

In "The Tavern" latter-day theatergoers will see Mr. Cohan in a different mood—a more mellow mood, a meditating mood—where what he sets on paper takes on an active and vibrant life tempered with judgment. The years have dealt kindly with the talents of Mr. Cohan, and Mr. Cohan has grown with the years. More power to him!

WHEREAS it becomes Mr. Gilbert Miller, following an old-established custom, to open a new play in Washington, it also must be mentioned that Mr. Miller is not averse to sending in here a play that has been tried and tested on Broadway. Next week, after "Marseilles" has had its baptism here and is on the way for confirmation services in New York, Mr. Miller will present Katharine Cornell in "Dishonored Lady."

Now it happens that Charles McClintock—old Dr. McClintock, no less—is already in town heralding the promised visit of Miss Cornell in her transcontinental success. Dr. McClintock, who once managed the Belasco Theater, where the Cornell dramatics will be unfurled, is the house guest of Dr. Frank P. Morse, the dean of retired Washington dramatic critics. That a retired dramatic critic should have a house—let alone a house guest—is startling in itself. Nevertheless, Dr. McClintock, as house guest of Dr. Morse, is delivering a series of lectures, in a few well-selected clubs, on the "Renaissance of the American Drama."

The good doctor, traveling many miles ahead of Katharine Cornell, and dropping into many newspaper offices on the way, has made a discovery. This is to the effect that "the road"—as they jokingly refer to it—is not dead, or dying, but is merely playing 'possum. In the case of a 'possum, all a world-wise colored boy has to do is to kick the 'possum; or make out like he's going to sneak up on it. Well, that's about the way it is with the road, according to Dr. McClintock. If you have a good play, or a good show, or a good circus, the road will awaken from its lethargy. It has been that way with Miss Cornell.

Always doing the unusual, Miss Katharine Cornell decided to make a backward trip across the country; not that Miss Cornell is backward. What actress is, for heaven's sake? Well, instead of leaving New York and going across country by easy stages to California, playing one-night and one-week stands, and then hopping back in a straight-away journey, Miss Cornell did the opposite. She took the long, long trail to California, opened her play in San Francisco and then made the one-week stands on the way back. A clever girl, this Katharine Cornell.

In making that trip, stopping in Los Angeles, Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toronto—on the way to Washington—Miss Cornell has broken not only hearts but house records. On the word of Dr. McClintock, she has played to gross business each week averaging $17,000—and—Dr. McClintock holds up his right hand and places his south hand over his heart—Miss Cornell did better business in two cities than Ethel Barrymore did in the same two cities; notwithstanding that Miss Barrymore was a perennial favorite in these places and Miss Cornell was making her debut, so to speak. The cities are Los Angeles and San Francisco.

THE sum and substance of all this seems to be that the old theater is on the way back to popular favor. Well, it's about time. The theater is not such a bad institution at that, taking it by and large. Was a time when it held a grudge against its younger offshoot, the motion picture palace. That day has passed. The theater, the old-line theater, and its son and heir now find they work well together; provided, always, that they do not step on each other's toes.

It was Mr. Ed Wynn, here not so long ago, who advanced the theory that the old theater and the new theater would some day realize what they mean to each other. Mr. Wynn has peeped inside both houses. His early training was with the vaudeville houses, and later the musical comedy stage—and then he went into the movies. His first picture was not much to look at—as he himself admits. His second picture, now on the way, an all-talkie of "Manhattan Mary," will show him in better light.

"The movie magnates are beginning to learn that they must not neglect the old theater," said Mr. Wynn, getting up from a piano rehearsal in the pit of the Belasco Theater, and facing an audience of three people—who had journeyed down one afternoon to beard the comedian in his den. That was the day he got his haircut and the barber, knowing the comedian was at the Belasco, asked him if he weren't Mrs. Madge Kennedy.

"Yes," went on Mr. Wynn, after tracing a history of the American theater, from the time the Hallams brought over the first English touring company and played old Williamsburg town, "Yes, the movie magnates have a lot to learn from the theater." He switched his cigar from the port to the starboard side. "And the theater has a lot to learn from the movie magnates—and the movies."

With that settled, it would seem that these two companion industries—or, call them art if you are so minded—should get together and put their shoulders to the wheel; if there is a wheel that needs turning.

STELLAR CAST INTERPRETS A PAGNOL PLAY

"Marseilles" is the American title of Marcel Pagnol's French success, "Marius," Gilbert Miller's second production of the season, which comes to the Shubert-Belasco Theater for one week, beginning tomorrow, with matinees Thursday and Saturday.

Pagnol, the author of "Topaze," suggested "Marseilles," the name of the south of France seaport, which is his native city and where the action of the play takes place.

As "Marius," Pagnol's drama is still having a successful run at the Theatre De Paris.

Mr. Miller will present "Marseilles" with an excellent cast, including Alexander Kirkland, Dudley Digges, Hubert Druce, Alison Shipworth, Frances Torchiana, A. P. Kaye, Douglas Wood, Colin Hunter, Arthur Lysons, Natica de Acosta and Henry De Koven.

Dudley Digges, last seen in the Theater Guild's production of "A Month in the Country," has long been associated with the Theater Guild and was seen in its productions of "The Doctor's Dilemma," "Marco's Millions," "Volpone" and "Major Barbara."

Alexander Kirkland is a native American, not English as many people assume. His first New York success was in the role of a callow middle-Western youth in a play called "Time." The following year he played the title role in "L'Aiglon" here in Washington, in the professional little theater managed by Robert Bell, where Josephine Hutchinson and Leona Roberts were also appearing. This role attracted so much attention to him that it resulted in an engagement with William Collier in Chicago. He then went to Europe for a year, during which he sang and acted in a motion picture to cover his expenses. On his return he played Antonio in the road company of "The Cradle Song."

He made a rather sensational success as Lightfoot in the Theater Guild's "Wings Over Europe." This season he appeared as Aleksei Bielisev in the Theater Guild's presentation of Turgenev's "A Month in the Country." Although under contract to the Guild, Mr. Kirkland has been loaned to Gilbert Miller to play the leading role in "Marseilles."

Natica de Acosta has forsworn the delights of the 400 to work hard as an actress. Miss de Acosta is a daughter of Ricardo de Acosta and Mrs. Marie de Zaldo de Acosta, and a niece of the widely-known Mrs. Rita de Acosta Lydig.

Resumes Lectures.

Friday morning at 11 o'clock Miss Clara W. McQuown will begin her eighth season of talks on questions of the hour in national and international affairs.

These talks are nonpartisan, interpretative reviews of important public questions. They are open to the public, but are given under the auspices of the Washington Club, in the assembly room of the club, 1010 Seventeenth street.

The course for this year will consist of fifteen talks, given on consecutive Friday mornings, from November 14 to March 6—December 26 and January 2 omitted.

The opening talk will be a review of the most important matters that have occupied the attention of the world in recent months.

GERALDINE FARRAR, distinguished soprano, who will be heard at Constitution Hall on Friday after long absence from the concert stage.

Alison Skipworth in "Marseilles"—Belasco.

FARRAR TO BE HEARD FRIDAY

Geraldine Farrar, the brilliant and magnetic soprano who dominated the operatic and concert field in America for many seasons, and who has returned to the concert stage after a temporary retirement, will inaugurate Mrs. Wilson-Greene's Artists' Course of afternoon concerts with an appearance at Constitution Hall next Friday afternoon, November 14, at 4:30 o'clock. This will mark Farrar's first appearance in Washington for several seasons.

Miss Farrar will open her program with Mozart's "Des Traumbild," while the first group of songs to be given will include four Schumann selections: "Ihre Stimme," "Soldatenbraut," "Gruss," and "In's Freie." Two songs by Schubert will follow; "Gott Im Fruhling" and "Liebe Schwarmt Auf Allen Wegen." Hugo Wolf's "Wenn du mein Liebster," Brahms' "Wiegenlied," and Richard Strauss' "Allerseelen" will conclude Miss Farrar's second group, which will be followed by two soli for pianoforte by Mr. Valentin Pavlovsky, pianist; the Bach-Siloti organ prelude in G minor and the Chopin scherzo in B minor.

The second half of the program will be opened with a group of four songs by Miss Farrar. Gretry's "Ariette," composed in 1770; Bizet's "Pastorale," Godard's "D'ou venez vous?" and a French chanson, "L'Eventail." This group will be followed by two soli for pianoforte by Mr. Pavlovsky: the Rachmaninoff prelude in G sharp minor and Chopin's "Valee Brilliant."

CHAMBER MUSIC AT ITS ZENITH

Four famed musicians playing four almost priceless instruments comprise the Stradivarius Quartet which makes its first public appearance in Washington Monday night at McKinley Auditorium, Second and T streets northeast, under the auspices of the Community Institute. This is the first of a series of ten widely diversified entertainments which the institute has booked for this fall and winter.

The Stradivarius Quartet takes its name from the four famous instruments in its possession. Alfred Pochon, formerly second violin with the famous Flonzaley Quartet, organized the present group when the Flonzaley disbanded, bringing with him Nicholas Modlavan, violinist. To this par was added Wolfe Wolfinsohn, first violin and Gerald Warburg, violincello. The chief aim of the new organization was declared to be to "make it possible for settlements, schools, colleges, universities, &c., to get a first-class quartet within limitations of their budgets."

The quartet takes its name from the four Stradivarius instruments placed at its disposal. These include the "Titan" violin of 1715, the "Spanish" violin of 1723, the "Lord Macdonald" viola of 1701 and the "Vasilin" violoncello of 1725, a group of instruments which experienced vicissitudes and adventures sufficient to fill a volume before reaching the safe haven with this group of appreciative artists.

At the Theaters 25 Years Ago

This new feature, culled from the files of The Post, will appear on the dramatic page every Sunday hereafter, in the belief that it will revive many pleasant recollections in the minds of theatergoers of the Capital.

NATIONAL—Miss Evie Greene and Holbrook Blinn in "The Duchess of Dantzic."

BELASCO—"Love Land, or the Geezer of Geck," with Alexander Clarke, Toby Lyons, Louis and Maym Kelso and John Keefe.

COLUMBIA—Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian."

CHASE'S—The Seldoms, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Crane, Hoey and Lee and other vaudeville acts.

KERNAN'S LYCEUM—"The California Girls." Burlesque with the Four Thoroughbreds and Ross and Adams.

"The Duchess of Dantzic" was a musical version of "Mme. Sans Gene," with lyrics by Henry Hamilton and score by Ivan Caryll. It was a London production that came to Washington direct from a fourteen-week run at Daly's Theater, New York.

"The Virginian," dramatized from the Owen Wister novel of the same name by Mr. Wister and Kirke La Shelle, was probably the most popular vehicle the late Dustin Farnum ever had. In his support was Frank Campeau in the role of Trampas, the cattle rustler. Mr. Campeau is still an active figure on the screen and has been equally successful in both silent and dialogue films.

In the announcement of the bill for Chase's, the then home of "polite vaudeville" in the Capital, may be perceived a reflection of the varieties' peculiar angle on smart showmanship in the subordination in the billing of Mr. and Mrs. Crane, in a dramatic playlet, to The Seldoms, the originators of plastic statuary "in triumphs of grace, immobility and pose." "Living pictures," in other words.

ZIEGFELD IS ENGAGED WITH LATEST SHOW

Flo Ziegfeld has decided to hold his new musical, "Smiles," for a third week at the local Colonial, by which time it will probably be set to open the Ziegfeld in New York. It is scaled at $5.50 here and has played to capacity since the opening last Tuesday.

Ziegfeld's troubles as usual have been due to having too much material. Opening night found the show with about as much sparkle as an overstuffed sausage. Fred and Adele Astaire are carrying the show, with Marilyn Miller finding herself in an awkward position, due to loss of dancing honors. Tom Howard and Eddie Foy, jr., are beginning to build their comedy with every indication of making a couple of fat parts for themselves.

The score by Vincent Youmans is good but has no punch number in evidence. Two songs are reminiscent of "Hallelujah."

Ziegfeld brought Ring Lardner over to work on lyrics and with the departure of Sammy Lee for the coast, has taken over the job of speeding up the production personally. It should be in shape for a New York opening November 17, but doesn't look like a smash.

ON A FROLIC, COHAN WROTE KEEN SATIRE

"The Tavern," at the National Theater the week beginning tomorrow night, has created somewhat of a stir in theatrical circles. Those playgoers who saw the piece nine years ago, when George M. Cohan first appeared in it, are quite ready for it again, it seems, for it is in response to numerous requests that Mr. Cohan decided to revive this noteworthy product of his pen.

While its author, in modest fashion, has referred to "The Tavern" as a "lark," he must be fully aware by now that it takes its rightful place in the history of American stage classics. A slight intimation of his intention to revive the piece stirred writers to such clamors that Mr. Cohan will don the costume of the strange vagabond once more to impersonate the fascinating character of his celebrated satire.

When "The Tavern" first made its debut on the stage in New York back in September, 1920, it is not extravagant to say it baffled the sophisticated minds of the critics. Mr. Cohan, protagonist of the Star-Spangled Banner, had fooled his public—or, at least, a part of it—by writing such a clever piece of satire. Audiences were taking him seriously. Then wiser ones smiled and began to whisper, "Why, George is just kidding us." And so after a lukewarm reception "The Tavern" became a rage and George Cohan, long since recognized genius of the American theater, was hailed as a dramatist to be ranked with the Shaws, the Pineros, the O'Neills.

While some of the other New York critics were mulling over the play and writing down their afterthoughts Robert Benchley paid his tribute to the drama and author in the following manner, which sums up "The Tavern" in a nutshell:

"In 'The Tavern' Mr. Cohan has taken what was evidently an exceedingly intense dramatic effort by Cora Dick Gantt, embodying all the familiar situations and lines of romantic drama, and allowing it to work itself into a fever heat on its own steam, has gradually piled it with burlesque hooch until, at the final curtain, it is standing on its head and throwing crockery at itself in an orgy of the most delightful insanity ever seen on any stage."

Every character that ever invaded the old melodramatic thrillers is present in "The Tavern." There is the hard-hearted innkeeper, the hired man, the hired girl, the innkeeper's son, the mysterious young woman seeking the man who ruined her, the sheriff, the governor, his wife and daughter and, lastly but not least the wandering vagabond who is the Deus ex machina of all the mysterious action that takes place during the course of one stormy evening in a lonely tavern.

Matinees are Wednesday and Saturday.

PADEREWSKI IN CONCERT NOV. 26

A miniature feast of Chopin is promised by Jan Ignace Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, who will inaugurate Mrs. Wilson-Greene's philharmonic course of afternoon concerts at Constitution Hall with a concert there on Wednesday afternoon, November 26, at 4:30 o'clock. the first concert Paderewski has played in Washington since before the World War, with the single exception of a benefit performance played here during the Coolidge administration.

No less than ten Chopin numbers are on the program which Mr. Paderewski's management has forwarded to Mrs. Wilson-Greene.

Another program of marked interest to Washington music lovers will be that of Clare Clairbert, the Belgian coloratura, who will make her concert debut at Constitution Hall on Saturday evening, November 29, at 8:30 o'clock, as the second attraction of Mrs. Wilson-Greene's Saturday evening concert series at that auditorium.

JERRI AND A SNAPPY SHOW

For the current week at the Gayety Theater, "Oriental Girls" will be the attraction, starring Jack La Mont, the inimitable Hebrew character comedian.

Featured also is the famous Jerri McCauley, unusually pretty, a brunette, and one of the most popular soubrettes on the Mutual circuit.

The chorus maidens appear as slave and dancing girls and pose gracefully during the enactment of "The Pascha's Dream."

Can't Get 'Em.

Earl Carroll is propositioning Greta Garbo and Eddie Cantor for "Personalities," but can not secure them.

Eddie Cantor is authoring Carroll's next "Sketch Book."

BASIL RATHBONE, an actor noted on both stage and screen, soon to be seen here in a new play, bearing the title, "A Paris Divorce."

AN INNOCENT LITTLE DEVICE ORIGINATED BY THE BORGIAS

SINCE medieval days when the Borgias fed death to their enemies in spiced viands, poison has always been the aristocrat's weapon for murdering. Being a swift way to exterminate a dangerous individual, it has appealed to intelligent and determined murderers who also were too fastidious to soil their hands with the more obvious and physical means of killing. Because of the insidiousness of its working, poison has proved a fascinating subject to those who take an unprofessional interest—as most normal and healthy persons do—in the crime of murder.

In the Middle Ages, when private murdering was done with poison by preference, there were artists in poison who chose their drugs with an eye to timing, physical effects, and the general appropriateness of the revenge. Modern poisoners seem on the other hand to have chosen the poison readiest to hands, or easiest to obtain.

A clear case of expediency is the choice of Madeleine Cary (heroine of "Dishonored Lady," in which Miss Katharine Cornell will shortly appear here) of strychnine for the murder of her importunate lover, Jose Moreno, who refuses to let her achieve a life of respectable married security.

This use of strychnine brings out an interesting fact characteristic of most poisons—that in small quantities, determined by research, they are or may be of benefit to the human system, while an excess of this amount is followed by fatal consequences. Strychnine is one example of this. It is a Javanese poison, extracted from the fruit of the strychnos tree which grows in the East Indies. This fruit is about the size of an orange, with a pulpy interior and a large round seed, which contains the substance from which commercial strychnine is made. With another one of the paradoxes so common in nature, the pulp of this fruit is generally harmless as food. The seeds which it encases are, however, at all times deadly.

The Javanese extract the poison from them by boiling, and use it to tip their poison arrows for warfare. It is effectively used in this way since so minute a quantity as one-half to one-quarter of a grain can destroy human life. One difficulty about using strychnine in murder, however, is that which Madeleine Cary met when she tried to make her lover drink a cup of coffee doctored with the drug. As those who have seen "Dishonored Lady" will remember, Jose Moreno at once notices the unusual bitterness of the drink, and it is only by a ruse that Madeleine succeeds in getting him to drink it. That the coffee should taste bad is not surprising; strychnine is intensely bitter, so much so that it will impart that quality to 20,000 times its weight of water.

Some idea of the effect of strychnine poisoning upon the human system is given in the following extract from the testimony of Dr. Alfred Taylor, witness for the crown in the famous British case of William Palmer, a strychnine murderer-by-wholesale, who was convicted of having murdered over a dozen persons by the use of the drug, which he usually administered in liquor. The symptoms of strychnine poisoning are, on the whole, very uniform. Strychnine, according to the testimony, is "first absorbed into the blood, then circulated through the body, especially affecting the spinal cord, from which proceed the nerves acting upon the voluntary muscles." Describing the reactions of a laboratory animal to which the poison had been administered for purposes of observation, Dr. Taylor said: "The animal for about five or six minutes does not seem to suffer, but moves about gently. When the poison begins to act, it suddenly falls upon its side, trembling and quivering. In death the body is tensely rigid."

In the actual murder-case on which "Dishonored Lady" was based, that of Madeleine Hamilton Smith, of Glasgow, the poison drug was allegedly arsenic. Miss Smith, hounded by a discarded sweetheart, who threatened to expose her relationship to him rather than have her make a respectable and advantageous marriage, was believed to have administered to him in cocoa a dose of arsenic sufficient to kill twenty persons, according to findings in the autopsy. Doubtless the reason why Margaret Ayer Barnes and Edward Sheldon, in working out their plot from the reports of the Smith case, substituted strychnine for arsenic is that the latter drug, being slower in its action, would not make the death scene in the second act possible.

AT THE PLAY IN NEW YORK

By ROBERT LITTELL.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—For ten years my colleague, Burns Mantle, has been performing the useful function of gathering a record of each theatrical season. Ever since 1920 Dodd Mead & Co. have published, when the fall of leaves gives a clear view of the bare—often dismally bare—branches of the preceding season, his annual summary, an invaluable volume which gives his estimate of that season; his choice of the ten best plays, a summary of and generous quotations from those plays, a list of the entire season's productions, musical or otherwise, with the main facts, cast, plot, &c., and other alphabetical and statistical information.

And this latest, "The Best Plays of 1929-1930," is, as usual, a valuable handbook for those who follow the theater. It has its shortcomings—chief among which I nominate Mr. Mantle's excess of modesty in not giving us more of his own shrewd comment, in giving us the thumbnail plot of every play and every musical show that burst upon first-nighters from one August to another, instead of recalling his own first night impression of it. For one thing, plots sound rather silliest than they sometimes are when summarized within the word limits of a night letter; and for another, Mr. Mantle is too experienced a judge to be forgiven for withholding the bulk of his opinions.

I hope, probably in vain, that in future volumes Mr. Mantle will assert his own tastes and distastes more, and feel as if considerably less importance the dry recording of how Frankie and Johnny became lovers in Act 1, were shot or shot at in Act 2, and were resurrected for a happy ending just before the curtain of Act 3.

Mr. Mantle is, in a way, the Walter Camp of the theater. I envy his powers to pass the products of a season through a sieve and, no doubt after much hesitation and self-questioning, set aside the ten most worthy offerings. I could not possibly do this. I lack prize-giving enthusiasm. If I had his job, my handbook would sometimes be called "The One Good Play of 1933-34," and occasionally, "The Bad Plays of 1934-35."

For this laziness, or irresolution, or difficulty in being pleased, Walter Camp Mantle's annual all-American play team is an excellent corrective. It forces me to think. It forces me, in this case, to do enough thinking and list-making and scratching out and relisting to challenge his selection, with which I do not altogether agree. And it has the healthy effect of making me track down and reestimate the dramatic timber that has floated downstream, in most cases downstream and around the bend and out of sight forever. Which effort is perhaps a greater tribute than most of that lost timber deserves.

Mr. Mantle's ten best plays of the past season are as follows (the order in which he puts them is that of their merit in his opinion):

"The Green Pastures," "The Criminal Code," "Berkeley Square," Strictly Dishonorable," "The Last Mile," "The First Mrs. Fraser," "June Moon," "Michael and Mary," "Death Takes a Holiday" and "Rebound."

As to the first choice very few people will disagree. Marc Connelly's Biblical fable is hors concours. I think I should put the next four on his list in any ten of my own selection. If I could select ten—which would be difficult. Mr. Irvine's agreeable but extremely old-fashioned and rather empty comedy might perch among those ten by default. Rather than include "Death Takes a Holiday," a grandiose idea heavily translated into a second-rate play, my list would stop at eight. For Donald Ogden Stewart's "Rebound" I should not hesitate to substitute Sean O'Casey's "The Silver Tassie," no matter how it was mangled by a Village production. It is certainly a more original and gifted play than either "Strictly Dishonorable," "The Criminal Code" or "The Last Mile."

I should also advance the claims of "Red Rust" as an extremely interesting document, though a singularly poor piece of dramatic writing. And I could find it easy to make room in Mr. Mantle's ten for "The Apple Cart," though it is not grade A Shaw by any means, or for the invention and malice of Marcel Pagnol's "Topaze."

The unpleasantness of much of "The Commodore Marries," and the inferiority of the rest of it to its first act, would not keep me from thinking that its attempt to do something out of the ordinary is more praiseworthy than the success of "The First Mrs. Fraser" in doing something we have so often seen before. Though on these grounds I ought to speak up for Phillip Barry's "Hotel Universe," and recant some of my own dislike of this the most wax-winged of any recent plays that tried for as high a flight.

"Lysistrata" and "Uncle Vanya" are, I take it, necessarily ineligible because of the acclaim of other and earlier civilizations.

I had hoped to draw up a rival list to Mr. Mantle's. But I simply can not make up my mind. Try drawing up a list of your own. No two lists, I am sure, would be alike. Which is why the theater is so interesting.

NEW WORKS ON THE WAY TO A FIRST HEARING

The Professional Players reveal another treat in store for Washington theatergoers in their announcement of a new play by Luigi Pirandello, to be presented at the Shubert-Belasco Theater the week of November 24.

This latest dramatic work from the pen of the internationally famous Italian novelist and playwright is making its premiere in this country under the banner of the Professional Players, and the author himself has made a special trip to America personally to direct rehearsals and supervise the entire production. The play has met with enthusiastic reception in Milan where it has been playing for many months, and it has been adapted for the English speaking stage by Dmitri Ostrov.

Pirandello's plays are always looked forward to with a great deal of interest abroad, not only in his native land, but throughout Europe. Translations into fifteen different languages have been made of almost all his plays and they have been most sincerely acclaimed by audiences wherever they have been presented.

No less an actress than Miss Judith Anderson has been chosen for the stellar role and that alone should prove the real worth of the performance, but with the two-fold appeal of famous author and famous star the Professional Players are again revealing their keen desire to present only the most noteworthy dramatic works of Europe and America.

Following immediately upon the heels of "As You Desire Me," the Professional Players herald the arrival of Grace George in "The First Mrs. Fraser," the week of December 1. This delightful comedy has been filling Mr. Brady's New York Playhouse with enthusiastic audiences for the past year.

SCREEN LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD

By HUBBARD KEAVY.

HOLLYWOOD.—The average Hollywood visitor is disappointed because he sees so few stars. Studios are inaccessible unless the visitor has a friend within or one without who has a pass.

He who is interested in ogling the stars (show me one who hasn't that curiosity) may get both eyes full if he goes to the right places.

LAURA LA PLANTE

These include a few churches, the beaches at Malibu and Santa Monica, the Friday night boxing matches, a certain few hotels, night clubs and cafes, the Embassy Club entrances and picture premieres.

The churches where a number of players may be seen include B'Nai B'Rith Congregation, in Los Angeles; Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, in Hollywood; two Catholic churches, the Good Shepherd in Beverly Hills and the Blessed Sacrament in Hollywood, and St. Mary's of the Angels, an Episcopal church, in Hollywood.

A hundred or more stars and featured players live or spend the weekends at Malibu, a beach about 30 miles away.

Clara Bow, Dolores Del Rio, Laura LaPlante, Ruth Chatterton, Richard Barthelmess, Nell Hamilton, Corinne Griffith and Gloria Swanson are just a few of those who tan themselves there.

Watch the Tide.

At Santa Monica Beach, south of Malibu, are the homes of Marion Davies (she has the one that resembles a hotel in size), Bebe Daniels, Mary Pickford, Norma and Constance Talmadge and others.

Hoy to see them? Just walk along the beach at low tide.

The fights in the American Legion Stadium in Hollywood on Friday nights attract two score or more players regularly. Winnie Lightner, Joe E. Brown, Paul Page, Lupe Velez, Vivienne Segal, Lloyd Hughes and Jack Oakie are a few of those who seldom miss.

Other Vantage Points.

Any taxi driver, newsboy or miniature golfer can name the three hotels, one in Los Angeles, one in Beverly Hills and one in Hollywood, where many prominent ones live, the names of cafes where they eat and two night clubs where they gather.

The Embassy Club, on Hollywood boulevard, really is a cafe, but only movie players, writers and directors are allowed to eat there. At noontime there always is a curious crowd watching celebrities enter.

The initial performances of big pictures, those important enough to rate spotlights and gardenias, attract dozens of players.

An Artist.

Charlie Chaplin is the only one in Hollywood who labors as an artist should. He works only when he is in the mood, or when he feels he will accomplish the most.

VIRGINIA CHERRILL

As short a time as three years ago schedules were unknown in the movies. Weeks and sometimes months were taken.

Gradually producers realized that if a picture were made in 18 days instead of almost as many weeks their profits would be greater. It is not unusual now to complete a picture in 14 working days.

Assistants and the other players come to his studio about 10 o'clock in the morning, but Chaplin seldom arrives until an hour later.

Activity starts when "He's here" is telegraphed around the lot and then assistants, cameramen, electricians and actors await instructions.

The "boss," as most of them call him, may want to retake a street corner sequence filmed three months ago. Or during the night he may have thought up a new ending for his story.

He first sees the "dailies"—scenes taken the previous day—and selects those he likes. At about 11:30 the day really starts. At 1:30 an hour is given for lunch. It may end then or it may last until 3:30 or 4 o'clock. It is seldom any later.

Concentrates.

It is a thrill to watch Chaplin. He is so intense, so wrapped up in what he is doing that his spirit is reflected in his workers and even in disinterested spectators.

His employes are loyal fellows who are quick to defend his eccentricities. Most of them have been with him for many years and they speak freely of his patience.

Players whom he employs for very minor parts often get three or four months' pay for one or two days' actual work. Virginia Cherrill, whom he picked as his leading lady, has been under contract more than two years and has worked but a few weeks.

No Manuscript.

Chaplin's scenes aren't written out beforehand and he never uses a manuscript. He has the story well in mind and he makes up the action as he goes along. Being a silent picture there is no dialog to bother with. He directs, sometimes telling others what to do and acting at the same time. No detail is too small to be done perfectly.

Before Adolphe Menjou was known, Chaplin spent 30 days on one small scene with him. He never became impatient during the entire month.

A PLAYWRIGHT MUST DEVELOP A NEW METHOD

The success of the talking picture transitions of stage plays has made it imperative for the playwright to create a more intimate type of drama if the theater is to endure, according to Walter Hasenclever, noted German playwright, who has just completed a study of the making of talkies in Hollywood.

Hasenclever, who is responsible for many stage hits now playing in Europe, was brought to this country to prepare the German adaptation of "Anna Christie" for Greta Garbo. He is now at work on the German version of "The Big House."

"The talkies have somehow changed the theater," the writer declared. "The most spectacular stage productions, also opera, are doomed outside of the talking screen, where the possibilities for presentation are greater than in the theater.

"The theater must be limited to more intimate plays in which the spoken word is everything. Those modern playwrights who are not able to adapt themselves to the limited technique of the new stage drama will have to divert their activities to the broader field of the screen."

TRADITION OF YEARS TO BE EXEMPLIFIED

The history of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York is the history of music in America. The orchestra, which will be heard here in a series of three concerts on December 16, January 27 and March 10, at Constitution Hall, has 88 consecutive years of musical history and tradition behind it.

When the Philharmonic Orchestra gave its first concert at the now forgotten Apollo Rooms on Lower Boardway on December 7, 1842, there were 63 members in the organization. Significant of the high standard of music maintained from the very start is the fact that the initial program included the Symphony No. 5 in C minor of Beethoven—the keystone of symphonic music. Today there are 110 regular members and frequently as many as twenty extra players are engaged for the performance of works which require auxiliary instruments.

The conductors of the Philharmonic have included the names of Carl Bergmann, Leopold Damrosch, Theodore Thomas, Anton Seidl, Emil Paur, Edouard Colonne, Victor Herbert, Henry J. Wood, Felix Weingartner, Wassily Saranoff, Richard Strauss, Gustav Mahler, Josef Stransky, Willem van Hoogstraten, Wilhelm Furtwaengler, Berdinardino Molinari, Sir Thomas Beecham, Willem Mengelberg, Arturo Toscanini, and this year brings Eric Kleiber, general music director of the Berlin State Opera, as guest conductor for the first six weeks of the concert series.

In Washington the first and the last concert of the three will be conducted by Arturo Toscanini and the second will be under the baton of Bernardino Molinari, with Nikolai Orloff, the well known Russian pianist, as soloist.

YOUNG EXTRAS ENJOY DAY IN SUN ON COAST

Child extra players are having their day at last.

Hundreds of children have been used during Paramount's production of Mark Twain's immortal boy story, "Tom Sawyer," in which Jackie Coogan returns to the screen for his initial talking part in the title role.

Although children bit players have divided honors with grown-ups in general town scenes, there are numerous sequences in which children are used almost entirely.

Several hundred youths worked in scenes which showed the picnic, the trip through the cave, schoolroom sequences and church action.

Children used range from the pre-school age to those of 16, with the majority being around 15, the age of Jackie Coogan. Junior Durkin and Dick Winslow, the three leading boy players.

Some of the children have been selected for singing voices, since there is one song to be sung in the schoolroom scenes.

Heading these children players is a cast of juvenile players of exceptional talent. Besides Coogan, the cast comprises Junior Durkin as Huck Finn, Mitzi Green as Becky Thatcher, Dick Winslow as Joe Harper, Jackie Searl as Sid Sawyer, Billy Naylor as Gen Rogers, Mary Jane Irving as Mary, and Billy Butts as Charley.

COMING STAGE ATTRACTIONS

THE Shubert-Belasco Theater announces for the week of November 17, Miss Katharine Cornell's first appearance in Washington as Madeleine Cary in "Dishonored Lady." This is the play that caused such widespread comment in newspapers and magazines during its all-season run at the Empire Theater in New York last year. The story was borrowed from an actual criminal trial held many years ago in Glasgow, Scotland. Obviously, the young star of "Dishonored Lady" is seen in the role of the girl placed on trial for her life when circumstantial evidence causes her arrest on a charge of poisoning her lover.

Miss Cornell has won success after success in roles of this type, notably as Iris March in "The Green Hat," as Leslie Crosby in "The Letter," and as Countess Ellen Olenska in "The Age of Innocence." She has fascinated theatergoers with soul searching portraits of tortured women, from her innocent young maiden in "A Bill of Divorcement," the play in which she made her first hit, to the modern Lucretia Borgia, she pictures in "Dishonored Lady."

Miss Cornell appears under the management of Gilbert Miller and Guthrie McClintic. She will be supported here by the Empire Theater New York cast.

LEOLITA, an Occidental who lends charm and verve to the entertainment offered by the "Oriental Girls," at the Gayety.

First of a series of annual revues, each of which is to bear the same title, is "Earl Carroll Sketch Book," which comes to the National next week, starting Sunday night, November 16.

And it is coming in its entirety, all of its 53 scenes and its 100 people, direct from an engagement of one solid year in New York. Everything about "Sketch Book" is the last word in the revue type of entertainment.

First, the producer, Earl Carroll, has been unstinting in providing the costumes and setting in the same lavish manner in which he has produced various editions of his "Vanities."

The author of the numerous comedy sketches, Eddie Cantor, has outdone himself.

The comedy stars, Will Mahoney, William Demarest and the Three Sailors, assisted by numerous principals, among whom are Gracie and Coly Worth, Dorothy Carroll, Nelda Lovely, Violet Lovely, Grace Du Faye, Omar, Don Howard, Bob Geraghty, Don Kennelly and Irene Ahlberg ("Miss America"), are well able to provide all the hilarious fun one can enjoy in a single evening.

Will Mahoney presents an outstanding feature which has never before been attempted. He dances upon a specially constructed xylophone and produces melodies which are distinct and ear tickling.

"Speed and Sparkle," the new M. B. A. burlesque and vaudeville offering, which comes to the Gayety Theater next week, has given every indication of being a show in perfect harmony with the present-day theatrical mode.

Not alone as an entertainment of plentiful laugh surprises does it aim to excel. The production scientifically and from a costume point of view shows that ingenuity was the guiding hand in its structure. So must it have been with the selection of its talent, as will be seen.

Godfather!

Joe E. Brown, First National star comedian, has been adopted by the University of Pittsburgh Football Team as their godfather, mascot or what have you. At any rate, the widely smiling features of Mr. Brown will adorn all programs at the varsity stadium, all official letterheads of the varsity team, &c., this season.

"Ambush" Next.

First National announces that one of the first pictures to go into production when the studio resumes active operation late in December will be "Ambush," from the play by Arthur Richman.

CLARKE & LA MONTE, Bessie and Laddie, doing a police department bit in Fanchon and Marco's "City Service" revue, currently at the Fox.

IF IT TAKES NINE TAILORS— HOW MANY FILMS MAKE STAR?

IT takes three to make a crowd, four to make a bridge game and nine for a baseball team, but no one has yet been able to determine the exact number of pictures required to make a featured player of the screen into a full-fledged motion picture star.

Clara Bow played minor, and then increasingly better parts, in 34 films before she was launched as a star of the first magnitude in the memorable Elinor Glyn picture, "It." Nancy Carroll's rise to stardom was faster. She was announced as a star after featured roles in but twelve films. Ruth Chatterton was made a headliner after but five featured roles.

A screen star, it must be explained, is a player whose popularity is such that his or her name precedes the title of the picture in which he or she appears on all main titles and in all advertising. Featured players are billed subordinate to the title.

Among the men of Hollywood, Maurice Chevalier is unique, for Paramount announced him as a star in his first American-made picture, "Innocents of Paris." It took eight pictures to build up Charles Rogers as a star, and as many for George Bancroft. Jack Oakie achieved the top after eleven. Gary Cooper reached stardom after fourteen featured roles. William Powell had a longer road. He played in 33 pictures before stardom came, principally as the result of his work as Philo Vance in the popular S. S. Van Dine detective mystery stories.

In this connection Hollywood is watching with intense interest the career of Marlene Dietrich, the beautiful German actress recently brought to America by Paramount. Even bets are being placed that Miss Dietrich will win her way to stardom after her very first Hollywood picture, the spectacular love story "Morocco," in which she is featured with Gary Cooper and Adolphe Menjou.

This production, played against the colorful background of the desert and the French Foreign Legion, was directed by Josef von Sternberg, the man who went to Berlin to direct Emil Jannings' first all-talking picture, and who found Miss Dietrich there.

If Miss Dietrich does the expected it will be the first time in the history of the talking screen that any foreign actress has won her way to stardom "overnight," as the Hollywood expression has it.

About Garbo.

Greta Garbo will start work in "Mata Hari" directly after completing "Inspiration," the picture on which she is now engaged. Robert Montgomery has the chief male role in "Inspiration," which is now in final stages of production under the direction of Clarence Brown. Others in the cast include Lewis Stone, Marjorie Rambeau, Karen Morley, Edwin Maxwell, Judith Vosselli, Zelda Sears, Beryl Mercer, Gwen Lee, Joan Marsh, Oscar Apfel, Arthur Hoyt, Paul McAllister, John Miljan and Richard Tucker.

Quite a Rumor!

Every one by now knows that Howard Hughes, with "Hell's Angels" packing $2 showings everywhere, is turning to the filming of "Queer People." Well, sir, what does one bright coast correspondent do but telephone Lincoln Quarberg, in all seriousness, and ask if it is not true that Mr. Hughes plans to purchase United Artists, Warner's, Universal and First National, in order to have the originals of the characters in "Queer People" play themselves in the screen version?

Make for the nearest port, captain!

Women Clubs Check Results of Elections In Their Own Interest

Noses Counted Industriously as Returns Are Recorded and Consequences Weighed With View Toward Ascertaining Whether Friends Have Been Augmented or Not

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

WOMEN'S organizations "counted noses" most industriously after Tuesday's elections, while interested in the welfare of women candidates for Congress, they also felt concern in retention on loss of office by members who had opposed or supported issues in which they were interested.

At the "watch parties" on Tuesday held at many organization headquarters of women, through the aid of the omnipresent radio, card catalogues were in constant use by women looking up views of newly elected members or those held over through the will of the people.

While some groups rejoiced at defeat of opponents in the House or Senate, others expressed regret that they had lost allies. For there is no such thing as blanket woman opinion in this country, any more than there is in other countries.

There was not much regret expressed anywhere over the passing out of congressional life of Senator Heflin, of Alabama, whose consistent opposition to measures advocated by women groups left him but few supporters in the feminine organization held in Washington.

Cable's Election Pleases.

The National Woman's party, while regretting defeat of some women candidates, expressed themselves as well satisfied with election which retained in office Representative John L. Cable, of Ohio who is responsible for the nationality bill pending in Congress and who has promised the Woman's party to further this measure to secure independent citizenship for married women at this session of Congress. They read with deep concern bulletins on the situation in the Seventeenth Congressional District in Pennsylvania, for Representative Frederick W. Magrady is sponsoring the equal rights bill of the Woman's party in the House of Representatives, as Senator Gerald P. Nye is sponsoring it in the Senate.

That women as members of Congress are taken as a matter, of course, is a matter of congratulation among the women leaders. Even the defeat of Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick in Illinois has not dampened their enthusiasm on this score. They are very much pleased with the running Miss Thelma Parkinson made for senator in New Jersey against such a powerful opponent as Dwight W. Morrow.

Veterans in the women's rights ranks recalled early days of recognition for women shortly after guns of the suffrage battle had died down and women at last were awarded the right of franchise. One lone woman, Miss Jeannette Rankin came to the House of Representatives. It was in the stressful days of the World War, and when Miss Rankin cried when she was called upon to vote for or against war the women of the country were divided in their views on this attitude of their first representative. Then came Miss Alice Robertson with views of her own in spite of the fact that she had been an antisuffragist before the franchise. Representative Robertson soon won the regard of her colleagues and was sure she was right or considered herself right before she would cast her vote on any subject. When the so called "woman's lobby" called on Miss Robertson to ask her to vote against preparedness measures she invited them out of her office. When she left her seat in Congress she inaugurated a campaign against propaganda directed at members of Congress.

Case of Mrs. Huck Recalled.

Mrs. Winifred Mason Huck, daughter of Representative Mason, of Illinois, came to Congress to work for peace and to succeed her father, but she only remained to the end of that Congress. Mrs. Huck was of particular interest to Washington, for when she was a little girl she often listened to the discussions of her father and other leaders in Congress in his office in the basement of the house at 312 Twelfth street, in which the Daughters of the American Revolution was founded.

Mrs. Mae Nolan, of California, came to Congress to fill the unexpired term of her late husband and to carry out his policies.

Then, of course, came the group of women who were destined to really be the pathfinders of women in Congress and be reelected to their seats term after term. These are Representative Florence P. Kahn, of California, who first learned all about her district by campaigning through it with her husband, the late Julius P. Kahn, whose seat she occupies. Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who, as the wife of the late Representative John Jacob Rogers, of Massachusetts, took a leading part in the social and political circles in Washington as did Representative Katherine Langley, who came to Washington while a very young woman, as wife of former Representative Langley, of Kentucky, and Representative Ruth Hanna McCormick, daughter of Mark Hanna and widow of Senator Medill McCormick, of Illinois. Mrs. Mary T. Norton, Democrat, of New Jersey, came to Washington, a stranger to most of the women leaders, but she has won her reelection term after term and is now as well known locally as she is in her own State.

Representative Ruth Bryan Owen is another well known Washingtonian although she holds her seat in the House as a citizen of Florida. She went to school here when her father, the late William Jennings Bryan, was a member of the House of Representatives.

Mrs. Wingo Is Selected.

Mrs. Pearl Oldfield did not run again to represent the district of her late husband although she became very well liked by the women leaders in Washington during her short term in Congress. Mrs. Otis Wingo, who has been elected to fill the seat of her husband from Arkansas, is well known in Washington as a Congressional hostess and a worker in the groups of organized women.

Mrs. Ruth Pratt's reelection is also pleasing to Washington women because of her generosity and support of women's activities here.

Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, recently appointed chairman of the field division of the Girl Scouts, called a meeting at the Girl Scout Little House on Friday. Miss Adelaide Werner, director of the region in which the District is situated, and Mrs. Sybil Gordon Newell, of New York, executive secretary of the field division, came to Washington especially for the meeting.

Mrs. Brooke has been a leader in the Girl Scouts of the District of Columbia since their reorganization during the World War to provide proper recreation for schoolgirls and for groups of older girls who came to Washington to do war work. It was through Mrs. Brooke's efforts that many women of wealth and social leadership were induced to take an active interest in the local organization. Mrs. Harding, Mrs. Coolidge and Mrs. Hoover have all occupied important posts in the local groups as well as the national ones. While Mrs. Hoover is a national executive of the Girl Scouts, she organized a troop here during the World War, and, even as First Lady of the Land, attends local troop and conference meetings.

Two women, Mrs. Shail Nanax and Mrs. Subbarayan, wife of the Chief Minister of Madras, attended the conference of delegates from India at the round table discussion on the future status of India, held at St. James' Palace, London.

Miss Abbott Backed for Office.

With the election of James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, to the Senate of the United States, the groups of women supporting Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, to fill Mr. Davis' place as Secretary of Labor are preparing to make further representations to the White House.

Those interested in advancement of women pointed out that there are now two women delegates to the League of Nations assembly. These are Countess Apponyi and Miss Susan Lawrence, of England. Miss Lawrence is parliamentary secretary to the minister of health under the British Labor government. Mary Agnes Hamilton, member of the British parliament, is a substitute delegate for Miss Lawrence.

Miss Marguerite M. Wells, of Minneapolis, acting president of the National League for Women Voters, has arrived in Washington to arrange for the legislative campaign which will be carried on by departments of the league this season. Miss Wells will remain in Washington as acting president of the National League until the first of January when Miss Belle Sherwin, the president, will return after eight months leave of absence.

Many Washington women will attend the annual convention of the Women's Christian Union to be held at Houston, Tex., November 11 to November 20.

Literary and book sections and study clubs of the local and national organizations are preparing to observe national book week November 16 to November 22. Lists of books suitable for home and school and for those with varied interests will be circulated by the clubs and at each meeting addresses will be made by men and women versed in the art of preparing reading courses for the American people.

Twentieth Century

The annual reception to club members will be held on Friday from 4 to 6 o'clock at the Washington Club. The committee in charge of arrangements consists of Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, chairman; Mrs. Louis W. Austin, Mrs. Proctor L. Dougherty, Mrs. Richard H. Liggett, Mrs. Edwin G. Nourse, and Miss Elizabeth Wightman.

The music section will hold its first meeting on Tuesday at 11 a. m. at the Y. W. C. A. A group of piano numbers will be given by Frances Gutelius, selected from Schumann, Chopin, Brahms, Debussy and McDowell. The program will also include a demonstration of the Theremin, the new ether wave instrument, by Marie de Beauvais Richards.

The nature section will hold its first indoor meeting next Wednesday at 2 p. m. at the Y. W. C. A., in charge of the chairman, Mrs. Leo D. Miner.

The civics section will meet on Thursday at 2:30 p. m. at the Girl Scout headquarters, 1825 M street. The program, "The Girl Scout's Place in the Modern World," will be in charge of Mrs. Gerrit S. Miller, jr., commissioner of the Girl Scouts of the District, assisted by Miss Dorothy Greene, local director.

Wheel of Progress

The Wheel of Progress held its first meeting of the season on October 27 at the Washington Hotel.

After a short business meeting, at which Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell presided, the members were called on to tell of their various vacation experiences.

A musicale followed. Miss Alice Neal sang, with the accompaniment on the piano by Mrs. Lawrence M. Hynson, and Roswell Bryant also sang. Mr. Bryant had as accompanist Miss Katherine Latimer, who also played "The Waits" in E flat by Chopin.

Soroptimist Club

Harry Gans, widely known lecturer on applied psychology, addressed the Soroptimist Club, Wednesday, at the Lafayette Hotel on the "Pychology of Success."

Miss Mary Ballinger, of the Marjorie Webster School, played several piano selections.

MODE IS EMPHATIC ON STRAIGHT LINES

Styles of Next Spring Are Outlined at Show in New York.

DAY SKIRTS SKIN-TIGHT

By HALLY POMEROY.

If heaven succeeds in protecting the poor working girl for a couple more months she may emerge soon from under her ethereal patronage and manage quite nicely for herself. That is, if the Redfern collection exhibited last week is any criterion, and surely it should be.

Until we realized how many straw hats were worn by the models we were quite addled by the showing—little print suits, little print dresses, and more little print suits. The little suits are a little different. The jackets are longer, finger-length, and rarely fitted. That, by the way, was an outstanding note. Things are definitely straighter. Full length and three-quarter length coats are as straight as they were before the recent discovery of the human waist. Short jackets are loosely hung, like boleros, except that they are much longer.

This straightness applies all the way down. Daytime skirts were fitted skin-tight as far down as the knees where flat pleats allowed enough room to walk. On one silk street dress, however, the pleats were held down to within six inches of the hem.

All of which leads us, of course, to the vital importance of pleats, be they flat and stitched down, flat and not stitched down, or knife. Knife pleating, varying from inch-wide to four-inch bandings is used all over the place, frequently around the widest part of the hips, where it, or anything else, is very much needed to break the line which should be really straight, but which, due to the shape of the female figure, rarely is. However, it is easy to boil down the subject of knife pleating to one simple formula: anywhere fur has been during the winter, knife pleating may be for spring.

Evening Dresses Rustle Pleasingly.

Several of the Redfern evening dresses depended entirely upon another kind of pleating for line, trimming and everything.

In one, the bodice consists entirely of horizontal inch-wide tucks; the skirt, of perpendicular inch-wide tucks, that become pleats below the hips. Where the horizontal and vertical tucks converge, a tricky checker board effect is achieved in some mysterious way which we could not decipher. Slender shoulder straps hold the dress on and there you are. They are graceful, mature looking gowns, with none of the flashy, theatrical manner of the fall and early winter fashions.

One evening dress was particularly appealing to the ear, the old-fashioned ear. It rustled, yes, actually. A stiff white taffeta slip made bouffant and charming an ochre lace dress that might otherwise have been quite dull.

The second half of this show was rather astonishing to these modest eyes and all the other modest eyes thereabout. We refer to the pajamas from Boue Soeurs. In the past few seasons pajamas have become so elegant, befurred, full, flowing and unrevealing that one forgot that once upon a time they were worn to sleep in. Without returning pajamas to the bedroom, Boue Soeurs reminded one of their origin in a way that was naughty-but-nice and rather disconcerting.

Lace and rosebuds, bits of embroidery, added here and there to pastel silk, suggest "love-nest," rather than bridge party, pajamas; but bridge party pajamas they were. The negligees were thoroughly and rightly lacey and very trousseau-ish, as Boue Soeurs' always are.

Elegance Rules Dinner Table.

We forgot to mention above Redfern's prize-winning "sparkling" evening ensemble. It sparkled more than anything we've ever seen, not excepting anybody's Christmas tree, and was utterly lovely for the very striking woman who could carry it off. The entire thing, gown and short jacket, was made of silver sequins. Long and slithery and shiny as a silver fish, and yet one thought first of a coat of mail. No one but a beautiful woman of 40 should dream of wearing it.

It is interesting to notice how such elegance affects so remote a thing as one's dining room table. For the rest of the month at the Home-Making Center there is an exhibit of tables laid for every occasion, and in this exhibit the reflection of a more formal age is very apparent. Though one may be as racy and kaleidoscopic as one wishes at breakfasts and luncheons, the white and silver austerity of the brownstone era has returned as the only correct table attire for dinner. The more Victorian the better—cut crystal candelabra

14 Yards of Lame Used By Worth to Make Gowns

Black Ermine Borders Dinner Dress of Dull White Satin; Short-Sleeve Frocks Brought Out for Daytime.

By KAY GRENELLE.

Paris, Nov. 8.—When the first winter collections were being shown here it looked as though the couturiers were going to cling to the silhouette they created last year. You saw the slight modifications that any extreme style must undergo to make it acceptable, but that was all. However, by the time the last dressmaker had released her collection you realized there was a new silhouette. To put your finger definitely on just what made it different was difficult. It was a gradual, subtle process—a touch to the waistline, to the sleeve or the neck, and it was done.

Though the new dresses follow the lines of the body, they do not follow it so closely that the wearer must needs spend all her time standing in order to feel comfortable. There is still the swathed hipline, but without that tense look. Encrusted bands placed diagonally across the hips, ruffles and skirts that are full rather than sharply flaring, all contribute toward this.

There is more fullness above the waistline than we saw last winter, when fullness did not dare appear much above the knees. Though blouses can not be described as actually ample, there is not so sharp a line from under the arms to the waistline. And in the waistline we find the most radical change of all, though it is still normal. And as a matter of fact, looks more normal than it ever did.

In front it is the same, but in back it is draped, particularly toward the center, forming a slight curve. Mme. Bruyere, who had one of the best collections of this season, uses this dropped waistline exclusively. On unbelted models she pulls the center back into two or three tiny vertical pleats placed low at the waistline.

Sleeves are receiving more attention this year than ever before. There is every conceivable kind of sleeve that you could wish for, from the tiny cap sleeve of Chanel to the raglan ones of Redfern. Lucile Paray shows short-sleeved afternoon frocks in both velvet and crepe.

Then there is her brown tweed with the tiny white pencil stripes that has a small puff just above the elbow of the long tight sleeve, which some one remarked was almost a replica of school dresses they used to wear in Russia years ago.

Jenny uses little ruffles and capelets on her full length sleeves. So you can easily see that almost any form of arm covering is bound to be a fashionable sleeve.

Molyneux Goes Youthful.

As soon as this new silhouette became firmly established in your mind Capt. Molyneux came along and revolutionized his style completely. Gone were his justly famous tailored clothes and femininity became his byword. High waistlines, fullness over the hips and ankle-length evening dresses were the result. Those of you who can be described as slim and young will no doubt find these more becoming than the other, more sophisticated type. At any rate, this winter finds us ready with two new silhouettes which are practically extremes, to choose from, and with the comforting knowledge that they are both in vogue.

Worth has more than justified, in his recent collection, the noteworthy fact that his was the first dressmaking house in Paris. There is no definite type of clothes that M. Worth adheres to. He believes in suiting the dress to the woman, rather than the woman to the dress. As he says, in referring to his evening gowns, "there are an infinite variety that will enable any woman to find 'her' gown or gowns to interpret the changes in her personality."

One of the best dinner costumes seen this year is called "caprice blanc," and is in white peau de soie, the new matt-surfaced satin. The long, full skirt has a border of black ermine, the touch of black repeated in black jet outlining the deep back and front decollete. It has long, tight sleeves, with a criss-cross belt around the waist tying in a bow at one side.

The accompanying cape, in black velvet, has bands of fur edging the large armholes. Incidentally, Mme. Coste, wife of the aviator, purchased this costume, along with several others from the house of Worth, for her trip to America to join her famous husband.

Short-Sleeved Frocks for Daytime.

In contrast to the long-sleeved dinner dresses, most of the day things at Worth's have short sleeves, for the reason that they have that "off-shoulder" feeling, to quote him again. There are several little interesting morning suits, usually of a soft woolen, with tuck-in blouses or sweaters. "Emeraude" is a black suit of wool in a diagonal weave. At the front of the collar of the short jacket there are two little criss-cross tabs fastening on jeweled buttons. The tuck-in blouse is in dark green velvet.

Black marocain dress, fitted at the waist, has its draped round collar edged with 2-inch dark green velvet ribbon and fastens on the side with a single strass button. He uses these jeweled buttons frequently and very effectively.

It would be impossible to describe the wide range of evening gowns in this collection. But no dignified matron need wear ruffles nor a sweet young thing appear in trailing black velvet. "Pensee d'automme" deserves special mention, though. It is made of fourteen yards of material, as M. Jean Charles Worth enthusiastically pointed out. It is in a red, pink and beige lame, in a small pattern, and has a square decolletage, with four pleated ruffles from the knee to the hem. These are carried up in diminishing widths in the back, and end in a small pleated bow at the waistline.

There are lots of evening things here that have more than a trace of the medieval influence. A white starched chiffon has a bertha slipped off the shoulders. The skirt is in diagonal ruffles, alternating the chiffon with black velvet ribbon, with one side of the hem touching the floor. A black lace gown has the dropped shoulder line outlined across the arms in flat white flowers. Another white mousseline, with a black taffeta ribbon sash around the high waist, has a square neck with a one-sided bertha. The skirt is made of seven ruffles with the scalloped edges in black beads.

YOUR NAME
What Does It Mean?

By HARRY A. DEFERRARI, Ph. D.

The family name "Baldwin" is one of the earliest to be recorded in English documents. It is of Teutonic origin and means "bold friend" or "bold protector." "Baldwin" was introduced into England as a personal name at the time of William the Conqueror. An aunt of William the Conqueror married Baldwin, Earl of Flanders. In early times Flanders was often called "Baldwin's land." Common French forms of this name are "Baudin" and "Baudoin." In Italian it occurs as "Baldovino," "Baldovini," and "Balduini."

The family name "Bowden" (also spelled "Bowdwin" and "Boden") has come down to us from various sources. In most cases it is derived from the Teutonic "Baldwin" or "Baldwine" and means "bold friend" or "bold protector." It also represents the old Frankish personal name "Bodo," which means "messenger" or "herald." As a purely English name it may mean either "he who lives in the valley near the hall or mansion" or "he who lives in the crooked valley." This name occurs with a great variety of spellings in the earliest English documents.

The family name "Blaylock" (also spelled "Blalock") is of English and ultimately of Scandinavian origin and means "he who has a livid or lead-colored lock of hair." However, it has frequently been confused with "Blacklock," which means "he who has a black lock of hair." Both names were obviously first given as nicknames.

The family name "Bierbach" is of German origin. It has nothing to do with the word "bee." It means "the beaver stream" and indicates an original place of residence.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE.

"SCORPIO."

IF November 9 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7 a. m. to 8:30 a. m., from 1 p. m. to 2 p. m. and from 6 p. m. to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 11 a. m. to noon, and from 10 p. m. to 11 p. m.

The astrological influences on this date are of too invigorating a nature to bring about the desired rest of mind and body, and it will be difficult to forget the worries of the past week. New interests formed through new acquaintances. More peaceful hours promised during the evening.

Children born on this November 9 will have aggressive and versatile natures. They will have courage, optimism, self-confidence and considerable ability. They will be naturally refined and cultured and will have simple tastes. They will be blessed with common sense.

You have too ambitious a nature to have a contented one, and you are ever seeking advancement. The fulfillment of a dream only brings your eyes in focus upon new fields to conquer, and there will always be streams of desire for you to cross. You are more desirous of social position and material acquisition than intellectual advancement. You are commercially minded, and you are very fond of your possessions. You stand on your own feet, free from the fetters of tradition, and you are always ready to embrace new ideas.

It will be difficult for you to learn how to relax and to live a less strained existence. You are never happy unless rushing from one thing to another, and in all probability you will suffer from "nerves." You are constantly seeking artificial amusements, and you are greatly bored with your own company. You care very little for reading, but you enjoy chatting with your friends. You are rather critical, and in many respects hard to please, and you should try to prevent this habit from growing upon you. Both envy and jealousy play their part in making you unhappy and discontented. You are inclined to be only interested in your own ambitions and hopes. Your beliefs and disbeliefs are stormy and obstinate affairs. Many journeys are pictured on the map of your life. You are an observant, but an intolerant, sightseer.

Broadcloth Dresses With All New Touches Have Call on Fashion

Suits in Any Color Trimmed With Fur Seen Where Smart Women Gather—No One in Style Who Does Not Wear Shallow Crown Hat. Many Dresses Are Sleeveless.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

FASHIONS that flatter, that stress the feminine note and mark the American woman the best dressed in the world, won a national indorsement on election day, not only from women but from men voters.

The busy professional woman, the homemaker and the society woman who put aside their duties and engagements for a few hours on Tuesday in order to cast their votes for the best man or woman, presented a Nation-wide pageant of taste and fashion of which any country could be proud. In every picture of election day activities the women, young and old alike, as a whole, were appropriately and well dressed, no matter in what district or what city the voting might be taking place.

Of course, there is less uniformity in the costumes of women this season than there has been for the last ten years. But smartness has a certain hall-mark each season which can not be overlooked. When we note a woman busy about her Christmas shopping, and wearing a tweed suit or a tweed coat with a wool dress, we are apt to think that she knows "what is what" in the fashion world. Even the handsome fur coats which every one or almost every one at least can have this year because they are priced so reasonably, do not seem to fill the bill for shopping as well as a suit or coat of tweed with handsome sport fur trimming.

We know that the women we meet at noon time or in the middle of the afternoon are going to luncheon or to a concert or meeting where the most fashionable of Washington society are gathered if they wear the new broadcloth ensemble suits, dresses with all the new touches of flared skirt and wide-elbowed sleeves and short coats in cutaway effect, elaborately trimmed with fur. These suits may be any color, of course, but we pay a silent tribute to the style acumen of the wearer if it is black or rust brown or one of the new vivid scarlets. Of course, sometimes these suits are of novelty material, and they also carry the air of modishness. Some of the best looking of these are green and black or scarlet and black or the new bright blue and gray or, black.

Dresses Under Fur Coats.

Dresses to wear under fur coats are a law unto themselves, but such an easy law to obey, for they are so becoming and useful. Many of them are made of wool in keeping with the season's vogue for wool. The favorite heavy crepe de chines and creep satins are also still on the lists of smart fabrics for these dresses. Velvet is considered good for every hour of the day or night this winter.

The high note of individuality is achieved by the necklines. These may be surplice edged with contrasting collars or with a dainty lace outlining or one of the new beadings. The cowl shaped and draped neckline is very good for this type of dress, often faced with white or contrasting color silk. One of the newest necklines, and especially liked by the younger set, is a cowl-like extra piece which is draped softly in the front and is caught under a buckle on one shoulder. Another becoming and youthful style is a soft band-like collar about a round neckline drawn through a buttonhole on one side.

Many of the dresses to be worn under coats are in Eton or bolero jacket effect. Sometimes the dress itself is without sleeves, and the jacket converts it into a proper daytime dress instead of an informal dinner dress, for which it is used by many women who like to make their clothes budget cover many different types of dresses.

In fact, the little jacket hip length or bolero in its shape is as popular with sleeveless dresses this year as it was last season.

These little jackets of lace or metal cloth do not always have to match the dresses with which they are worn. For daytime as well as evening, these jackets do much to give finish to the gowns, especially when the lace used for daytime is one of the heavy new close meshed wool laces. A black velvet dinner dress worn by a debutante achieves dignity enough for a calling costume when she wears with it a gray and scarlet metal cloth bolero, edged with fur and a small hat with a soft brim made of the metal cloth. With a fur coat that is slipped off at each home as she goes about to one at-home after another, she has a dress that will serve her well in the busy hours of the debutantes.

New Costume Jewelry.

Every season brings forth something very interesting in costume jewelry and the little accessories which cost a pretty penny although they do not bear the badge of "real."

For the afternoon costume, one of the newest necklaces is made of fine silver or of platinum, if desired, with a semiprecious or real stone at intervals and with heavier stones at the ends. This is literally tied in front about the throat and the two ends hang down gracefully. To match these are bracelets which can be tied about the wrists or above the elbows if the sleeves are short, or of the new falling-away-from-the-arm varieties.

For the sport costumes there are necklaces and bracelets to match, formed of wide silver links and handwrought.

For an evening toilette, a woman who has many precious stones in her jewelry casket, chooses a flat rope of seed pearls with rhinestone balls at the end, which she knots about her neck, allowing the ends to fall down in the back. Sometimes she wears seed pearl and rhinestone ball earrings to match.

Fur Coat Black and White.

Mrs. Corcoran Thom has one of the modish new tunics of cream over a black satin skirt. With this she wears a black fur coat faced in white fur and a black velvet hat draped closely to the head.

Miss Lucile Swift had on at one of the parties for the debutantes a dress of flame-colored tulle made with a molded bodice and a wide full skirt touching the floor. The bodice was made with an off-the-shoulder effect.

Mrs. Hamilton McCormick-Good-hart, who is visiting in Washington, was seen last week in a dress of French blue wool, embroidered down the front in pastel shades. The dress is made with a long tunic and a flared skirt. With this Mrs. McCormick-Goodhart wears a hat of felt to exactly match the blue of the dress.

Mrs. Richard Wilmer is also wearing a French blue dress of crepe satin. This is made with a cowl neckline beaded in bands of beige and brown. Her hat is of French blue felt.

Miss Laura Tuckermann wore for a stroll on Connecticut avenue a suit of gray and orchid tweed with a high collar of gray fur. She wore a small gray hat. Miss Tuckermann is also wearing a dress of white taffeta made with a very long flared skirt and a fitted bodice belted at the natural waistline. A huge velvet sash drags on the ground forming a slight train. The bodice is the drop shoulder style held in place by green velvet straps.

Mrs. John Hope, formerly Miss Anne Hopkins, is wearing an evening dress of scarlet moire, with embroidery in flower effect in the back and with drapery in the back of the skirt in bustle effect.

Miss Catherine Fechet had on at one of the luncheons a dress of black crepe sating with wide sleeves of embroidered black chiffon. With this she wore a smart black hat with a turned back brim.

Miss Virginia Glazebrook is wearing a dress of French blue wool with a cowl neckline faced in a lighter shade of blue silk. With this she wears a blue tweed coat with a gray shaded fur collar. Her hat is of French blue felt.

Miss Margaret Musser, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Robert C. Musser, has a dress of white grained silk, made on closely fitted lines but with a flaring long skirt. The fitted hip line is drawn under a huge bow at the back and the neckline is caught with a small white bow.

Mrs. Effingham Townsend is wearing an ensemble suit of gray velvet trimmed with gray fur. Her hat is of velvet and has a turned back brim.

Mrs. David S. Ingalls, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics, is wearing brown wool afport dress with a beige coat with a deep brown fur collar on it. With this she wears a brown felt hat.

Blue Crepe de Chine.

Mrs. Charles Parker Stone is wearing a dress of blue crepe de chine with a blue leather belt and wide collar of gray caracul.

Mrs. Jouett Shouse wore at one of the luncheons of last week a dress of black velvet made in two-piece effect with a cream-colored chiffon blouse. She wore a black velvet hat turned back in the front with this outfit.

Mrs. Robert Ash had on at one of the out-of-door events a dress of black cloth with which she wore a black coat with a cape edged with handsome dark fur. Her hat was a modified beret.

Mrs. Virginia White Speel chose for one of the teas of last week a gown of black chiffon made with a tunic effect. With this Mrs. Speel wore a black velvet coat with a high fur collar. Her hat was of black velvet with a slight brim.

Judge Mary O'Toole is wearing an ensemble costume of brown tweed with a collar of brown fur. With this she wears an egg shell satin bodice and a brown felt hat.

Mrs. Edward Finkenstedt has a suit of brown tweed made with a finger tip coat belted at the natural waistline. Her hat is a brown felt modified beret.

Miss Frances Hill is wearing a coat suit of gray and green tweed with a brown fur collar. Her hat is of brown felt with a turned back brim.

Mrs. Charles Francis Adams wore at one of the recent afternoon events a coat suit of black cloth, made with a cut-away coat. This had a high collar of Persian lamb knotted at one side. Wide cuffs were placed near the elbows, edged with Persian lamb. With this Mrs. Adams wore a small black felt hat with a narrow velvet brim.

Outlined With Ermine.

Mrs. Hugh Auchincloss had on at a tea a dress of draped black velvet with an outlining of ermine. With this she wore a black velvet coat with an ermine collar. A draped ermine scarf completed this costume and Mrs. Auchincloss wore a small black velvet draped hat with a touch of ermine on it.

Mrs. Frederick W. Harris is also wearing a black velvet daytime costume. The lower part of the skirt is flared and the hip line is fitted. The bodice is in bolero effect. With this Mrs. Harris wears a princess coat with huge collar and cuffs of sable with the sable cuffs placed at the elbow according to the latest dictates of fashion. Urging sympathetic cooperation between the parent and teacher, Mrs. Saunders, in her address, said: "If we do not give the teacher good material to work on we can not expect too much of the teacher; it is only by the home and school working together that the child will receive the best possible education."

An exceptionally well-trained group of pupils from Mrs. Johnson's fifth grade presented an instructive, as well as entertaining, health play, and when the roll of parents was called, it was Mrs. Johnson's class that received the $5.00 prize for the largest attendance. Miss Coates' first grade reported 100 per cent membership of parents in the association.

The executive meeting was held at the school Monday afternoon. Mrs. George Green was elected first vice president to fill the term made vacant by the resignation of Mrs. Frank Mann.

As a result of efforts of the Parent-Teacher Association another teacher has been assigned to the school, thus relieving the congested teaching conditions in the kindergarten, first and second grades. Two new drinking fountains have been installed, which, with the one already in the building, now furnish an adequate water supply.

Tenley-Janney.

Mrs. Stafford, of the Janney staff of teachers, discussed the present curriculum, in contrast to that of previous years, before the parents at the Monday afternoon meeting of the association. She emphasized that the same basic subjects still form the foundation of the present curricula, but they are no longer interpreted as so much information to be mastered and stored away, but as tools to be used in the real problems of living.

Mrs. Webb, also of Janney, collaborated with Mrs. Stafford in explaining how the subjects are interpreted today by giving a concrete demonstration of "socialized recitation."

Mrs. W. E. Denton, former editor of the Parent-Teacher Sunday column, spoke on "P.-T. A. Publicity," stressing the need for every member to be an alert publicity helper.

An unusual opportunity is offered the parents to hear some of the best authorities in the city at the study group which meets every two weeks on Wednesday in the Janney auditorium at 1:30 p. m. Dr. W. A. White, superintendent of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, addressed the group last Wednesday on "Mental Hygiene and Home Adjustment."

Dr. Loren B. T. Johnson, well-known child specialist and consultant at the Washington Life Adjustment Center, will be the next speaker, on November 19, when he will take up the subject of "Freedom and Control."

Repeated appeals are made by the principal, Miss Pulizzi, for clean, wearable garments for destitute children whose attendance in school is dependent upon an available supply of clothing. A certain fund is designated by the association for rehabilitating shoes and garments donated to this purpose.

A report on the Halloween benefit card party showed an encouraging increase in the treasury, but the sum realized is not sufficient to meet the obligations of the association. Unless it is increased through paid-up membership, other money-making projects will be necessary, which is contrary to the aim and purpose of the Parent-Teacher organization.

Mrs. E. Faast was nominated treasurer to succeed Mrs. H. K. Cumming, who has resigned.

The meeting closed with an appeal to have "Every member a paid-up member."

Miss Zelda Mench gave a brief resume of books in the school library that are of interest to parents.

An important meeting of a group of mothers of very young children was held Friday night at the school. It was a get-together meeting under the leadership of Mrs. Frank Lees, of the Parent-Teacher Association. Miss Rebecca Rogers, who taught the preschool kindergarten, was present to answer questions and lead the discussion.

Lucretia Mott.

The Lucretia Mott Association met October 23 in the school auditorium with the president, Rev. D. E. Wiseman, in the chair. The president made a short address, stressing the needs of several improvements about the grounds and building for the protection of both teachers and pupils.

The president, in conclusion, asked the administrative principal, Miss M. E. Shorter, to address the large audience.

Miss Shorter thanked the parents for their hearty cooperation and emphasized the need of sending the children to school on time to relieve the danger in hurrying across streets.

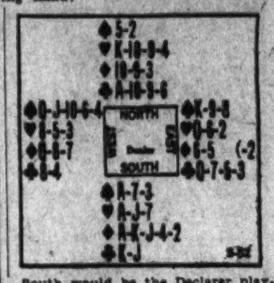
WORK ON BRIDGE

There is a play in Bridge (either Auction or Contract) which some experts would call rudimentary, but which many experienced players fail to understand or fail to carry out when the opportunity to use it arises at the table. It generally is known as the hold-up and can best be explained by illustration in the following hand:

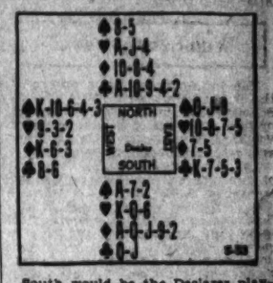


South would be the Declarer playing one No Trump at Auction Bridge, three No Trumps at Contract Bridge; and West would be the leader. West's opening lead would be a Spade and Declarer, having the Ace and two small in the South hand and only two small in dummy, would hold up the Ace until the third round so as to exhaust the East hand of Spades in the event of West's having held five and East three. If West and East each held four Spades in the beginning, holding up until the third round will not exhaust East; but in that case there will be only four Spade tricks and the adversaries can cash only three of them.

Having held up his Spade Ace until the third round, Declarer should so manage his finesses that if they lose it will be to East, not to West. If West should win a trick he would have two more Spades to cash, and four Spades plus the trick which gave West the lead would save game.

To trick 4 South should lead the King of Clubs and to trick 5 the Jack of Clubs, finessing the latter when West does not cover. Of course East would win and, not having a Spade to return, would lead a Diamond which South should win with the Ace (a false card). Declarer now is sure of one Spade, three Clubs and two Diamonds—six tricks. To make game he needs three more. He has two Hearts without finessing and at least one more if the Heart finesse loses, two more if it succeeds. He should first lead his Ace of Hearts and then his Jack, finessing the latter. Once more he has the hard luck to find East with the Queen, but nevertheless game is now assured as South will not finesse the Diamond that East will lead.

A second illustration of the principle of holding up will be seen in the following hand:



South would be the Declarer playing a contract of one No Trump at Auction Bridge, three No Trumps at Contract Bridge.

West would lead the fourth best of his only long suit (Spades) and South, with only one stopper, should hold up until the third round. He then should not attempt to establish his longest suit (Diamonds) of which he has eight cards in his combined hands with only the King missing, because if he finessed Diamonds and lost, West would get in to cash his Spades and save game. Declarer can count one Spade, three Hearts, one Diamond and four Clubs—a total of nine tricks—even if the Club finesse should fail; so he should lead the Queen of Clubs and finesse it. If East, when he wins with the King, should lead a Diamond, South should not finesse the Diamond as he has game assured by taking only one Diamond trick. If East should refuse to take either the first or second Club trick (not likely as the North hand contains a Heart entry), Declarer can put North in with the Jack of Hearts, lead the Ace of Clubs and, West having no Clubs, can then with safety lead the Ten of Clubs, drawing East's King and making the Nine of Clubs good.

The Declarer will fail to make game in this hand if:

(a) He does not hold up his Ace of Spades until the third round; or

(b) After holding up, if he attempts to finesse Diamonds, and lets in the "danger" (West) hand should the finesse lose.

Dare's Weekly Fashion Letter

Something New in Hatdom

New York, Nov. 8.

I KNOW 'tis said that one always likes the new styles and finds them particularly fascinating just because they are new, but I'll tell you something—there's more reason than that why I like the new hats!

I like the new hats because they are so unusually flattering, so picturesque without being stagily so, and such an artistic relief from the charming but unimaginative hats of not so many seasons ago.

I suppose it's no new story for you to be told that the most successful hats of this winter are those that are based upon the beret, pronounced, by the way, either "Bay-ray" or "beret," which is the perfectly legitimate Anglicized version of this word. All French words and expressions are not Anglicized, and when they are not, they must be pronounced in the French manner only.

But back to our hats! The beret is a successful mode because it is flattering and youthful without being too obviously so, and also because it lends itself to so many, many variations and versions.

Yet this being an era of individuality, for she who does not feel at ease in the beret or in any of its variations, there are other quite as popular ideas of the season, the tricorne, for instance. This is a hat, by the way, which must be chosen with great care—she of the sharp or pointed features beware it! Even Le Monnier's delightful interpretation of this Napoleonic piece of headgear, with the one point pointing to the shoulder, the other straight out from the temple, and the third pointing straight up over the opposite eye, has to be chosen judiciously.

Also in this revolutionary tricorne are variations. Robespierre would never recognize his own hat, by the time Reboux gets through tying it with a rose pink velvet bow, or Marie-Christiane finishes shirring it around the forehead, or the way, in fact, that any one makes one point and two knobs out of a three-pointed idea!

A Couturier's Idea.

Patou it was who designed the hat that completely covers one side of the hair and face, and completely uncovers the other side. No longer does the Sweet Young Thing have to tip her perfectly harmless cap at a rakish angle to achieve a rakishness, or whatever it was that she tried to achieve. Patou's idea is a "comedy relief," if I may be allowed the expression, from the movement Agnes started last year, off the forehead and down in the back like the headwear of a "religieuse" or a Red Cross nurse.

And it's a very nice idea, if you have lovely, shining hair that you are proud of, and it falls in natural-like waterwaves over your ears.

As to Sports Hats.

William Tell is at it again, in sport hats. Some of them are decidedly Tyrolesque or otherwise, have double brims. Many a sport hat is trimmed with a grosgrain or leather hatband, but the newest and most favorite trimming is undoubtedly some sort of a perky little feather or two.

After Desktops Fall.

Evening hats range all the way from the elaborate Sunday night frock type of a hat to jeweled nets that struggle between being a fairy princess' bonnet and a nightcap—or—I mean a boudoir cap. The best thing I like about the little jeweled evening caps is their facility for keeping one's coiffure in place—ideal for the moonlit decks of the Ile de France, for instance.

Speaking of boudoir caps, they are quite comme il faut again, because growing-out bobs can become very inartistic in pillow-land, and also because the new ones so closely resemble evening hats that the stigma of the detested name "boudoir cap" is forever removed from them.

The Fur of Hats.

And now just to leap around a bit from hat to hat, as it were, what about the really smart things that fur has done in the hat world at last? Little close-fitting cloches in any of the hat furs are really charming, especially when and if they are matched, oh, very discreetly, by a bag or cuffs on gloves, or something of the sort. Only the very flat furs, such as galliack, broadtail or shaved caracul, are used successfully; for ermine, squirrel and lapin (don't be fooled, lapin means "rabbit" in French, and that's what it is in any language) gives one a rather Baby Buntingish appearance, so that the smarter modistes don't attempt to use them.

So-o-o-o, I guess that's about all the hat chatter for today.

Au revoir!

Brilliant Water Colors, Picturing India, On Exhibition at National Art Gallery

Most Successful Works of Bagdatopoulos Done Under One Hour.

Washington Club Having Annual Exhibition of Members.

By ADA RAINEY.

WATER colors by William Spencer Bagdatopoulos are on exhibition at the National Gallery of Art until January 1. These water colors are of the near and Far East, with a few of the Grand Canyon of Arizona and some Taos Indians. This is the second exhibition within the year by Mr. Bagdatopoulos held at the National Gallery, which is in itself a distinction, for it is very difficult for an American artist to have an exhibition in this most coveted gallery. The honor of an exhibition in the National Gallery is always one of the great desires of every American artist. To be represented here is a distinction that falls to few. One reason why this is so difficult to obtain is that the space for exhibition is practically nil. To make way for this present exhibition it was necessary to dismantle two rooms and either store the paintings or place them elsewhere and there is no free space available. It is a condition that it is hoped will in the near future be remedied.

In the plans for the forthcoming buildings undertaken by the Government in its extended building plan of governmental buildings there is a space marked for an art gallery which it is hoped will soon materialize. There are hoards of paintings now stored in the basement of the National Gallery which it is not possible to hang on account of lack of space and there are bequests that it is not possible to accept for the same reason. It is a crying need for the Capital of this great Nation to have adequate space so that the talents and achievements of American artists may be represented in fullness. Of course, really great art has no nationality and we recognize this, but it is only proper and right that the art of our own country should be fittingly displayed, for art is the most civilizing element in life and not by any means something added, something of frills and mere ornamentation which many seem to think.

All the great capitals of Europe have their art galleries, which are considered their most important treasures. They are treasured by the state and by the individuals and are considered among their most important economic assets, for they bring travelers to see them and students to study them. So it will sometime be here in Washington.

Greek-English Artist.

In the meantime we are glad to welcome the brilliant and interesting water colors by the Greek-English artist, Mr. Bagdatopoulos, whose scenes from the Orient are like a visit to that picturesque land. These water colors are really illustrations of the impressive scenes of the East and of many of the men and the fascinating women who make up that pageant of life and movement.

The artist has had unusual opportunities to know his Orient and has made the best of them. He was at one time traveling for the Times of India and did a series of illustrations for that paper. Then later he went to the East for his own work and was free to roam from Madras to Cashmir and from Calcutta to Bombay. He brings us his own reactions to the life and color of India, which is now beginning to interest the commercial and economic interests here in America more than ever before. Men are beginning to ask what will India take and consume of American products and a market of increasing value is seen in this picturesque land which has hitherto been regarded the exclusive province of Britain and dependent on her exclusively.

Consequently the look of the land and its people are even more interesting than formerly to Americans. And these paintings are illustrations par excellence. They give us the real appearance of nature and the buildings there with accuracy. For the artist seeks to portray nature without any change of her outward appearance. There is no distortion here. He is true to nature as he sees her and with almost photographic accuracy he transcribes her aspects. And it is a fair land and a thrilling one with the ruined temples and the brilliant sun streaming on the turrets and walls of dilapidation. The sun and the brilliant light of India is excellently given. The sun that with its uncompromising brilliance harmonizes all colors and takes the crudeness out of them all. The artist has great cleverness and facility in the manipulation of his colors. He uses mostly pure transparent water color as being the medium best adapted to a hot country where the dust of the road will often spoil an entire morning's work when it spreads its veil over the surface of an oil painting.

He Works Rapidly.

There is brilliance of execution and great rapidity in the work of Bagdatopoulos, who is spending a month in Washington on his way to Santa Barbara, where he expects to settle permanently. He takes but an hour to paint some of his most successful paintings and often does them in an even shorter time than that. He declares that no work that is not completed quickly is a great painting. No painting since Rembrandt that has taken a long time to paint is a work of art. If the artist does not paint quickly, giving his natural reactions to his subject, it is not art. The slow, labored painting has nothing to do with fine painting, declares this clever painter. He is able to work in the hot sun of India without inconvenience and he has made a success of his work because he can endure the difficult conditions under which the artist has to work there. His work is play to him and he is indifferent whether he is working with oil or water color, whether he is painting landscape or portraits, it is all the same to him.

He has had an interesting and colorful career. As a youth he was admitted to the Academy of Painting in Rotterdam, where he distinguished himself as being the youngest pupil ever to be admitted there. He learned all the art he knew in the few years spent there as he left when but 16. But he retained his great admiration for the old Dutch masters and their methods of using color and declares that the modern use of color is purely commercial. His own color, while being brilliant, is subtle and not crude at all. After he left the Rotterdam Academy he took his paint box and knapsack and traveled through the near East or wherever his fate led him and he painted his way through the months, selling enough to meet his meager needs. He had the spirit of the true adventurer for he was indifferent whether he slept in a good hotel or out under the stars, and undoubtedly his art is the better for this experience.

"Sulking Boy," by George Luks, in the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

"Banyan Tree, Calcutta," "Under a Banyan Tree, Madura," "Old Temple, Mysor," "Mohammedan Temple, Madras," "Street Scene in Mysor," "Village in Kashmir," "Taj Mahal," "Dilwara Temples," "Mount Abu," are some of the newest and most interesting paintings in the exhibition of this unusual artist at the National Gallery.

Photographs on Exhibition.

Another foreign-born artist is being honored this month at the National Museum of Natural History in the Arts and Industries Building in the department of photography. Severo Antonelli, a young Italian now living in Philadelphia, was honored last Sunday when Barone Giacomo di Martino, the Italian Ambassador, opened his exhibition of photographs which are now on view there. Many important personalities in the governmental departments were present, headed by Dr. Charles G. Abbott, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; Mr. Ruel P. Tolman, assistant director of the department of graphic arts, and Mr. Arthur J. Olmsted, custodian in charge of the photographic department, were all present. Congressman and Mrs. Beck, from Pennsylvania, were interested visitors, as the young artist is from the district represented by Mr. Beck.

The rise of the 28-year-old artist is almost spectacular. He came to this country when but 13. He studied drawing, for he had always drawn in his own town of Abruzzi, and he kept on drawing here. But his father died and he had to make his way and his living, too, so he went into the studio of P. T. Doonor, of Philadelphia, and there began his work in photography and was able to make his living as well.

His photographs are dramatic with the Italian sense of drama. They are effectively and strikingly posed. His work in light and shade is remarkable and his posed nude figures are delicate and free from any hint of sensuality. His draped figures are studies in line well carried out. One of these figures, "Pieta," received the silver medal in the fourth International Salon in Tokio, Japan. "Dolor" received the monetary prize in the American annual competition. This is an unusually fine photograph. A Spanish figure of South America received the gold medal in the Christmas Salon in Antwerp. For the rest, his portraits are striking and impressive with a certain aspect of character stressed which makes them unusual and interesting. Particularly is this so of his portraits of women.

The exhibition can be seen until December 1.

Water Colors Shown.

The Washington Water Color Club is holding its annual exhibition in the Arts Club this week through Saturday. This year only the members are exhibiting, consequently the show is smaller than usual, but it gives an excellent opportunity to view the work of the Washington artists.

A pleasant, sincere, workmanlike little show of conservative tendencies it is, and attractively hung. Gertrude Brown distinguishes herself with a strong water color of a harbor scene which is trenchantly portrayed. It will be remembered that Miss Brown had a one-man show last year that was so good that it came with almost a shock, for she had exhibited but little formerly. Marguerite Lent is another of the younger artists who is showing strong work. Miss Lent has received many prizes from out-of-town water color clubs and Washington may well be proud of the achievements of this artist. Her "Wind Over the Harbor" is decidedly vital and well constructed.

Susan Chase shows two paintings that are distinctive. "Pia Palace," a Portuguese scene, is filled with light and color, delightfully well conveyed. "Twisted Trees" is another strongly characterized painting, rich and deep in color, which Mrs. Chase has painted with skill.

"Magnolias," by Frances Hungerford Combs, is a splendidly painted flower decoration. It is large in design as well as a painting of large flowers. Her "Blue Fan" and "The Old Sycamore" are delightful in color and construction. A "Still Life," by Eleanor Parke Custis, is a departure from her usual work and is as individual and interesting as her former paintings of streets and houses which she does so surprisingly well.

Lesley Jackson has returned with several scenes from her recent journey to Egypt and the Near East which are well painted and interestingly conveyed. Miss Jackson always does conscientious work and her water colors have the stamp of excellence. "Cairo Street" and "The Harbor at Palermo" are especially delightful. "Chimneys, Boulogne sur Mer," by Marguerite Munn, is another delightful foreign view which is painted with authority and excellence. Miss Munn always handled her water colors skillfully.

John W. Perkins' "New England Street" is painted with much sympathy and understanding of his subject and his medium and the two New England scenes on either side of this painting by Elizabeth Graves are charming and attractive. "Cape Cod Trees" is particularly good with its suggestion of the starkness of the cape well conveyed.

Nelia Patterson's "Flower Market" and "Across the Street" are studies in color and impressionistic in tone, while "By the Sea," by Roy Clark, is rather uncompromising in his method of painting, but strong and virile.

A. H. O. Rolle, the president of the Water Color Club is represented by two paintings that are rich and full in tone, "Evening on the Chesapeake" and "Boat." Both evince a skill and knowledge in the handling of water color and are harmonious and rich in tone, and are charming water colors, that one could live with with pleasure.

"Gloucester Derelict," by Lona Miller Keplinger, is a strong study of boats at Gloucester which is particularly well done. "My Window," by Annie D. Kelly, is a still-life excellently painted. There are some other flower paintings in the little show which are pleasing and attractive.

French Workers Taxed $60,000,000 in Income

Paris, Nov. 8 (A.P.).—Government figures show that while 851 incomes of more than $40,000 a year yield $7,500,000 to the French treasury, the more than a million wage earners who get less than $800 yearly pour $60,000,000 into the public purse.

MODE IS EMPHATIC ON STRAIGHT LINES

thus replace, if one wishes, the old family silver candlesticks.

Is it too early to think about colors for next spring? If every one is being patriotic and "buying now," at least they may want to keep a cautious weather eye out for next season's ensembles when it comes to buying this season's accessories. The 1931 color card put out in France by the Federation de la Soie has just arrived.

The news is this: Four of the eleven leading colors for tailored daytime wear are shades of dark blue. Pastels, though deeper than they have been, are as smart as ever. Rose, shading from very light to dark tones, is one most important. After rose comes a wide variety of greens, shading from watery turquoise green through five pale greens of the Nile order, called Biarritz, to grass greens, light, bluish greens, chartreuse and mossy greens.

Beiges, ranging from yellowish casts to this season's pink beige, are to be very smart. The light blues will have a slightly mauve tone and, of course, there are yellows in all the sunlight shades.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

WITH the opening concert of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra last Tuesday and Mrs. Wilson-Greene's gala concert opening her evening series at Constitution Hall on Saturday night, the musical season in Washington is well launched. Still richer feasts are promised for music lovers in the comprehensive programs planned by local impresarios.

Reports from local schools and instructors in music are that gratifying enrollments of students have been made and the music situation in the National Capital has shown improvement generally. There is much disappointment that no plans for a concert series by the newly organized National Symphony Orchestra have been announced as yet. Washington needs to learn the art of supporting its local music ventures more generously. Out of Washington have gone a number of musical stars in the past to scintillate in wider fields perhaps, and how can we expect to furnish such stellar material in the future if our artists lack adequate mediums for the expression of their genius such as is afforded by opera companies and symphony orchestras?

A request has been made by the new American Library now being established at Glasgow, Scotland, for copies of representative American musical works (orchestra or chamber music scores, choruses or instrumental music, operas or vocal works of art) and music books by American writers. These books or scores may be sent to Helen Harrison Mills, chairman, at 1200 Columbia terrace, Peoria, Ill., who will forward them to Scotland.

An innovation of the Marjorie Webster School of Expression and Physical Education, are the musicals given at the school every second Sunday of the month, at 4 o'clock.

Well-known Washington singers appear on the programs, accompanied by Miss Martha McClelland Stevens, who is the school accompanist. Today Miss Maxine Snavely, soprano, will be presented.

The fortieth annual benefit concert of the Vaughn Class of Calvary Baptist Sunday School will be presented in the Sunday School House on Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock. The proceeds are used in benevolent work of the organization.

Participating in the program are Florence M. Yocum, soprano; Elsa L. Raner, violinist; Alice Sigworth Morse, reader; Harry J. Harth, xylophonist; William F. Raymond, tenor, and Fred East, barytone. The accompanists are Marie C. Hansen, Harry Wheaton Howard and Robert S. Thomas.

The I. F. C. A. Choral Club met Thursday night under the direction of Dr. Edward P. Donovan. Mrs. Evelyn Stone Thomaides is the accompanist. Mrs. James E. Colliflower, president, appointed Mrs. Frances Higgins and Miss Ethel Roddy in charge of the monthly programs, and Miss Helen Higgins attendance chairman.

There will be a musical service at the Church of the Ascension tonight at 8 o'clock. This will be in the nature of a preparatory service for the mission which will start on the following Sunday in all the Episcopal churches in the diocese.

Old, well-known and requested hymns will be rendered at this service Sunday night, and the soloists will be Ella Mintz, Sue Gardner and Blanche Ramon, sopranos; Dorothy Sinnott, contralto; Leslie Coyle, tenor, and Roy Sabean, bass, with Mrs. Henry Hunt McKee organist and director of the choir. The public is invited. The choir will close the services of this mission on the last Sunday night, when it will render "The Song of Thanksgiving," by Maunder.

This cantata will also be presented at the Y. W. C. A. by the same musicians.

The Zimmer Harp Trio with Nellie Zimmer, concert harpist; Harry Newcombe, dramatic barytone; Ruby Smith Stahl, soprano and Paul DeLong Gable, organist, will give a special vesper concert at the First Congregational Church this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. The Zimmer Harp Trio was the first harp trio to tour the United States, presenting a program assisted by a vocalist, of harp solos, duos and trios, voice solos with piano and harp accompaniment. Harry Newcombe, dramatic barytone, has the unusual combination of personality power, yet sweetness of tone and a finished vocal equipment seldom heard. He has had the distinction of participating in the receptions to some of the most noted visitors to America. He sang at a reception to the Prince of Wales in Halifax. Ruby Smith Stahl is the soprano soloist and director of the choir of First Congregational Church. Paul DeLong Gable is the organist of the church. The following is the program for Sunday:

Organ—"Finlandia" (Jean Sibelius), Paul DeLong Gable. "Nordische Ballade," harps (Foents), Misses Marie Mellman and Louise Harris. "A Kingdom by the Sea" (Somervell); "The Fool Hath Said There Is No God!" (O'Hara), Harry Newcombe, barytone. Organ—Dedication from "Through the Looking Glass" (Deems Taylor), Paul DeLong Gable. "There Is No Death" (O'Hara), Ruby Smith Stahl, soprano. Etude in D Flat (Liszt); Tarantelle (Aptommas), Nellie Zimmer, concert harpist. Gavotte (Gluck); Chorale and variations (Widor), Misses Zimmer, Mellman and Harris. Organ—Prelude and Fugue in E Minor (John Sebastian Bach), Paul DeLong Gable.

Tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock, the Zimmer Harp Trio, with Harry Newcombe, dramatic barytone, will give a benefit concert at First Congregational Church. The compositions to be rendered will be by Sarderson, Gallotti, Massenet, Charles, Bach and Holy.

A meeting was held at the studio of the noted Polish pianiste, Felicia Rybier, at No. 2 Dupont circle, and a new Felicia Rybier Music Club was organized. Felicia Rybier was elected president; Miss Little, vice president; Miss Eleanor Hulbert, secretary; Miss Lena Morris, treasurer. The club plans to meet the second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

A scholarship will be offered later to the most talented member of the club, to be paid for out of the treasury. The club was organized for serious young students, and will give them an opportunity to perform in public, thus gaining necessary experience. The club welcomes all arts—piano, vocal, violin, dramatics. A gala concert will be given November 11 to commemorate the opening meeting of the club. Each member is permitted to bring a guest for this occasion.

The senior choir of the Lincoln Road Episcopal Church will present compositions of B. J. Wrightman, a member of the congregation, at its sacred monthly musical this evening at 8. The program will be under the direction of Rovilla Fry Atkinson, and Margaret Morgan Harry will play the organ. The program will be as follows:

Organ prelude; doxology; Hymn No. 27; prayer; Hymn No. 57; address by minister, "Music—An Asset to Worship;" violin solo, "Meditation," Mr. Wrightsman, accompanied by Mrs. Powell; vocal solo, "God Is Love," Rovilla Atkinson, contralto; women's trio, "As Pants the Hart," Phebe Stline, Mae Stevens, Rovilla Atkinson; psalter reading, forty-fifth Sunday evening; gloria; piano solo with violin obligato, "Caprice," Mrs. Powell, Mr. Wrightsman; soprano solo, "Just as I Am," Phebe Stine; anthem, "The Earth Is the Lord's," choir; offertory; Hymn No. 50 (verses 1, 2, 5); silent prayer; benediction; postlude, "The Ashlar Club."

The soloist at the German service at Concordia Lutheran Church today will be Alice Wilcox, soprano, who will sing "Frau Dich Sehr Meine Seele," by Von Weber.

At the English service the chorus choir will sing the chorale "Let My Prayer Come Up," by Purcell, and the anthem "The King of Love," by Shelley.

The cantata choir, under the direction of John R. Monroe, will take a trip to Annapolis this evening to sing the Bach cantata, "Thou Guide of Israel" at the Lutheran Church in that city. The soloists will be Raymond Escherich, tenor, and Raymond Hart, bass.

One of the outstanding musical events of the early season will be the appearance tomorrow night of the Stradivarius Quartet at McKinley auditorium, Second and T streets northeast, as the opening attraction of the 1930-31 program of the Community Institute. Successors to the famous Flonzaley Quartet, the Stradivarius Quartet hopes to carry its ideals as high, and will have the same great devotion to its art, Alfred Pochon, organizer, announces.

As the Flonzaleys made their public appearance here under the auspices of the Community Institute, it was felt fitting that the first public appearance here of their successors should be made under the same auspices. Their appearance is in line with the plan of the Community Institute, which is managed by the Community Center Department of the Public Schools, to give Washington high class music and entertainment at a nominal cost through the use of the centers.

Special parking arrangements will be in effect tomorrow night, all automobiles entering through the gate on the T street side. Taxis will continue through to the next street and those who wish to park will be directed to space on the plaza. The program for the evening follows:

Quartet in D minor, No. 13, Allegro moderato, Andante, Menuetto, Allegretto, ma non troppo, (Mozart); prelude, Night, Tongtaboo, (Ernest Bloch); quartet in A minor, op 51, No. 2, Allegro non troppo, Andante moderato, Quasi minuetto, moderato, Finale-Allegro non assai, (Brahms).

A concert will be given by the Nordics Mandolin and Guitar Orchestra, Walter T. Holt, director, assisted by Gladys Marks, soprano; Howard Moore, barytone, and Esther Spier, pianist, under the auspices of the Luther League at St. Matthew's Evangelical Lutheran Church, 827 Kentucky avenue southwest, Friday at 8 p. m. The program will be as follows:

Orchestra, overture, "Stradella" (Flotow); soprano solo, "Yesterday and Today" (Spross); "The Piper of Love" (Molly Carew)—Gladys Marks, Miss Spier, accompanist; Hawaiian guitar solo, "At Dawning" (Cadman); "Stein Song" (Fenstad)—Grace Robb; guitar accompaniment by Miss Hill; piano solo, "Valchik (Russian waltz) (Mokrejs)—Esther Spier; tenor banjo solo, "On the Levee" (Morris and Santos); "The Century March" (Keppel)—Annabel Bird; banjo obligato by Mr. Holt; orchestra, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" (Bland); "Au Moulin" (In the Mill) (Gillet); barytone solo, "Song to the Evening Star (from "Tannhauser") (Wagner); Nocturne (Pearl Curran)—Howard Moore; Miss Spier, accompanist; mandolin solo, Mazurka-concerto (Munier)—Walter T. All Souls' Church (Unitarian), Sixteenth and Harvard streets, announces the resumption at 5 o'clock this afternoon of the half-hours of music, in which Lewis Corning Atwater, organist, will be assisted by a prominent soloist.

The program for the current month is as follows: November 9, early Italian program, assisted by Charles Trowbridge Tittmann, bass. November 16, modern Italian program, assisted by Flora McGill Keefer, mezzo-contralto. November 23, Jewish program, assisted by the Temple Quartet, Florence Sindell, soprano; Flora Brylawski, contralto; George Myers, tenor; John Marville, bass. November 30, Massenet program, assisted by Mabel Flehr, contralto.

Following is the program for this afternoon: Adagio ed Allegro (Galuppi, 1706-1784); Courante, Siciliano, Burlesca and Pastorale (Scarlatti, 1683-1757); Vittoria mio core! (Carissimi, 1604-1674), Mr. Tittmann; Quando corpus morietur (Pergolese, 1707-1739).

A sacred concert conducted by Constantino Yon will take place at St. Dominic's Church on Sunday evening, November 30. Mr. Yon is considered one of the ablest organists in the country. Assisting him will be a double quartet of male singers made up of soloists from several of the larger New York choirs. Admission will be by ticket only.

The Misses Sutro, ensemble pianists, will give a recital of two-piano music written especially for them, Sunday night, December 7, at the Mayflower. The proceeds will go toward a fellowship in memory of W. H. Humiston at the McDowell Colony, in Peterboro, N. H., by which each year a gifted composer can go to the colony free of expense.

The Misses Sutro have long devoted themselves to the cause of young composers, and of American composers particularly.

Driver Is Rewarded By Court for Honesty

Denver, Nov. 8.—Honesty is still the best policy in police court. Take the case of George C. Link. He appeared before Police Judge Walter White and prosecuted himself on a charge of taking the right-of-way.

The irate driver of the second machine, who insisted that police punish Link, failed to appear at the trial. "I am going to fine you $12," Judge White told Link. "And because you told the truth despite the fact no one appeared against you, I will suspend the fine."

In the Grip of a Caribbean Storm

Dr. Paul Bartsch With a Student From George Washington University and Two Capital Boy Scouts Faced Death in a Boat Calked With Putty—Recent Scientific Discoveries in the Gulf Stream Islands Described.

By LUCY SALAMANCA.

"I SHALL lose my mind! Oh, I shall certainly lose my mind!" lamented the Bahaman captain as he alternately worked at the pumps of the laboring vessel and tore his hair.

"But, captain, said a soft voice close by, as a tall, bronzed figure raised itself from its labors, "One can not lose that which one does not have. To lose one's mind, captain, presupposes that one has a mind."

The Bahaman captain blinked, cussed roundly for a bit, then knelt to pray. The tall, bronzed figure stooped again to the pumps. And the seas pounded the vessel unmercifully as five sturdy, rhythmic figures labored to keep her afloat. All that night they were tossed an torn by the waves until the first faint gray streaks of dawn above the roaring waters thrust into relief the dark, soaring bodies of the frigate birds, headed for their breeding grounds.

The seams of the little vessel lay open, tragically disclosing the fact that they had never been calked, but filled with putty—a putty that the angry fingering sea had long since forced out and washed away. As the gray faded into lavender, one of the disheveled, weary crew raised his head suddenly.

"A light! Wasn't that a light?"

The Bahaman captain ceased his self-scalping operation. He even ceased to pray. For beneficiently across their channell streamed a light—a light so golden and promising it flooded their spirits with warmth, their hearts with a great gladness. It was a beam from the Castle Lighthouse and they followed it gratefully straight to the heart of the Fortune Island group.

And the lame little nameless vessel limped painfully into port.

She was 60 feet long, with a 21-foot beam, and very shallow draft. Her engine was 62 horsepower. Flat-bottomed she was, the better to navigate the shallow waters surrounding these West Indian islands. But her seams, alas, had been stuffed with putty!

Her owner, Dr. Paul Bartsch, had picked her up in Miami, and, accompanied by two Boy Scouts of the Capital—Alva Nye and Ray Greenfield; Howard Chippick, a student of George Washington University, and Harold B. Peters, an entymologist of the Department of Agriculture, had started out upon a fascinating expedition around the rim of the Caribbean, in and out the atolls lying in the waters to the south of Key West. Dr. Bartsch is officially known as the curator of Mollusks and Helmenthe (which are fancy names for shells and worms) and coral, of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D. C. And the title gives one no idea at all of the genial, bronze-skinned gentleman who bears it. It is altogether too ponderous and formal for one so breezily friendly, so straight and tall, and (despite self-references to the "sere and yellow") for one so perennially youthful.

This expedition into Southern waters was the last of a series of three, designed primarily to explore the island groups for mollusks. But they have proven more far-reaching than this. They have provided not only a wealth of scientific specimens, but have been interesting and valuable for physiographical and geological reasons and have contributed in no little measure to that great fund of knowledge which the Smithsonian explorers are quietly and painstakingly accumulating year in and year out to the inestimable benefit of all the generations to come.

"Every truth is an asset," Dr. Bartsch tells me. "And one never can foresee to what use the most insignificant bit of knowledge may be put. For instance, during the World War, I was privileged to turn to account the results of certain observations I had made of snails. I had observed that snails were very susceptible to poison gas, that they responded to the presence of poison gas when that gas existed in proportions of one part gas to twelve million parts of air. Now it is not necessary for a soldier to don his gas mask until poison gas is present in quantities of one part gas to four million parts of air. Therefore these snails made excellent detectors. Long before the gas was present in disastrous quantities the snail noticeably reacted and and many calamities were averted. Certainly I had no thought of any such possible use for my simple observations while I was studying the humble and unlovely little creature. So one never knows, I say, how knowledge may be turned to account."

The Jose Enrique in which Dr. Bartsch cruised after the putty-patched boat was condemned. Above at the right is Dr. Paul Bartsch.

Then the results of these expeditions may be far reaching, indeed. From the last of the series, from which Dr. Bartsch returned late in October, more than 250,000 mollusks were brought back to Washington, including many varieties hitherto unknown to science. More than a thousand bird skins and more than 1,000 skins of reptilian life were also brought back by Dr. Bartsch, for this student of mollusks does not confine his activities while in the field to his own special interests. He remembers his brothers in science and has secured for them many valuable specimens of great importance.

The Washington Zoo benefited by the acquisition of 21 living iguanas, some of them more than 2 feet long, which Dr. Bartsch carefully wrapped and shipped by parcel post—perhaps the most original package that has ever passed through the mail channels of Uncle Sam! One hundred and twenty huge hermit crabs and four rare tortoise shell turtles were also transported to the Washington Zoo, while many dead specimens of rare reptilia now await study and dissection in the workrooms of the Institute.

Lying off the shore of the Atlantic Coast is a string of islands extending from New York to Brazil, where the chain ties up at the mainland with the Island of Trinidad. From a viewpoint of physiography and geology these islands are very interesting and many conjectures have been made by scientists with respect to their origin and history. Why have these islands their peculiar conformation? Where did the creatures come from that inhabit them? Was this once a populated area? In a study of the little living animals of the beaches, the mollusks and shell life, lay the answers to some of these queries, and Dr. Bartsch felt the desire to enter the field for himself instead of trusting to the haphazard collections made by men who have only scratched the surface, as yet, of the possibilities.

Dr. Bartsch presented his project to the Smithsonian Institution as one of the problems that might be sponsored under the Walter Rathbone Bacon Traveling Fellowship. This fellowship, which is open to any zoologist, may be awarded for two or three years and is an annual award. The project, as outlined by Dr. Bartsch, evidently appealed to the committee, for the fellowship fund was placed at his disposal. Two years ago, as a result of this, he spent four months in Cuba and made a very complete and valuable survey of that island's shell life. Equipped with an automobile and tents Dr. Bartsch went to Havana and was given the freedom of the island—a courtesy bespoken by the State Department. Last year, continuing his work, Dr. Bartsch chartered a schooner in Porto Rico, for the purpose of exploring the Windward and Leeward Islands. Island by island he traveled from Porto Rico to Trinidad.

He found these islands an entirely different habitat than those of any previous exploration, for they were one and all the land of volcanoes, extinct or alive, and their cinder cones and ashes had formed a soil utterly different from that of the Antilles group. This acid soil of the volcanic islands also was found to develop an entirely distinct flora and fauna and a variety of strange and unusual plant life, flowers and trees and shrubs, as well as different snails, other molluska, and animal life. Dr. Bartsch's party climbed a volcano every day, frequently entering their interiors. They sailed at night from island to island in order to be up at the crack of dawn to enter another volcano.

From this group of islands they sailed to the coast of Venezuela to visit the poetically named islands lying off the South American Coast—Margarita, Orchilla, El Roque, Bon Aire, and Curazao. From Curazao they sailed to Aruba and thence home.

This year Dr. Bartsch wished to finish the gap in this territory and set out to explore the southern Bahamas. The ill-fated vessel that was so unmercifully pounded by angry seas was secured at Miami. Its flat bottom seemed to them ideal for the purpose of navigating shallow seas and it was with the greatest confidence in their craft that they set out on June 2 of this year. From Miami they went to Key West where, thanks to the cooperation of the Navy Department, they obtained motor fuel from the navy stores. Their path led from Key West across the Gulf Stream to Cay Sal and the Bahama Banks. In this region there is a peculiar land formation known as an "atoll," consisting of a series of keys enclosing a lagoon. In and out the small keys of this atoll they threaded their way, gathering magnificent collections of shells and tiny animal life. Among these was the conch shell, which is used by the natives for food and the emptied shell of which later finds its way to New England to perform another gastronomic service when it is blown upon lustily, calling the hired man to dinner.

As their small clumsy boat entered a small harbor at Dama Caya, Dr. Bartsch gazed sharply across the water at the shore line. His keen eyes made out a wooden stake, set into the sand of the beach.

"There is tragedy here," he told his companions. "We shall see."

And sure enough, as they approached the wooden stake—see there, heaven knows when by some distraught soul—they discovered a human skeleton, the bones of a man, his bony arm yet clinging to this last hope of mortal aid. The bones were carefully collected and brought back to the Institution, where they were turned over to Dr. Hrdlicka.

For 220 miles they crossed

from Damas Cays to Anguila, where they thoroughly explored the beaches in their quest for rare shell life. From Anguila they made their way to the Flamingo Cays, of the Crooked Island group. This group of islands is described by Dr. Bartsch as "an aquatic desert," for one can see the bottom constantly as he navigates the keys. Every island was painstakingly covered and eventually the party left for the Ragged Island group. It is on islands of this group that the interesting Frigate bird, or Man-of-War bird makes his home. They furnish the breeding grounds of this specie and the scientist and his companions watched the maneuvers of the birds with much interest. The peace and tranquillity of that moment were, however, to be rudely shattered, for it was shortly after putting out for islands to the eastward that their vessel sprang her first leak.

At the Bahamas Dr. Bartsch had acquired the services of a Bahaman captain. He was a captain, strangely enough, who knew painfully little of the sea and his presence aboard the leaky vessel did not add to the comfort or happiness of other members of the crew. The Bahaman captain showed a regrettable tendency to abject and complete despair and none of that resourcefulness in emergencies with which sea captains are generally credited. In fact he gave continued and vocal utterance to his distress and spent the time in cursing everything thicker than a hair, in prayer, or in assuring the assembled company that he "would lose his mind." All this did not help the situation in which Dr. Bartsch and his men found themselves.

By midday on the occasion referred to above the sea was pounding the life out of their vessel. The seams sprung leaks with alarming rapidity and inspection disclosed the fact that they had never been calked, but filled with putty. It became necessary for the men aboard to man the pumps, and all that night they worked in watches, pumping for one hour out of every three. Just before dawn broke they welcomed the beam of light from Castle Island, and thus ended, as they scrabbled into port, a memorable Fourth of July excursion.

In Jamaica Bay, where they eventually got in, they tried, as best they could, to patch up the sorry ship. Water was pouring into her through the open seams as if coming over the spillway of a dam. It was impossible to turn over the clumsy, flat-bottomed vessel, so they had to content themselves with patching her sides. A barrel of cement—the last on the island—was obtained from the lighthouse and the holes were filled with cement. The Bahaman captain was all for running ashore, but—as Dr. Bartsch himself puts it—"as everybody could swim, I saw no reason for such a drastic move."

They started out again with the patched vessel, headed toward the Fortune Island group. The native blacks of this island could not believe any group of men would go to such pains to hunt a few shells and shook their heads wisely, insisting that here was another of the treasure-hunting expeditions which so frequently visit these islands. Eastward to Plana from the Fortune Islands they sailed and then, in a 40-mile jump, on to Mariguana. Their boat was leaking again in a most distressing manner, and again the pumps were put into use.

The seven managed, however, to reach Mariguana and then on to the Caicos Bank, where they obtained more specimens for their rapidly growing collection. From Turks Island they returned to Little Inagua, then to Great Inagua, where they decided to put out for Guantanamo, on the island of Cuba, where their vessel might be overhauled and reconditioned.

This run proved an anxious time, however, for the explorers, for the hurricane season was upon them and they moved forward in the direct path of the hurricane. They made their first run at night, for the sea was calmer by night and the wind had died down. Dr. Bartsch kept his eyes on the barometer for any change in the readings, but they covered the distance, fortunately enough, without meeting with mishap.

At 11 o'clock in the morning of the next day they entered the harbor of Guantanamo and their vessel was inspected by naval authorities at the naval yards there. It was promptly condemned as unseaworthy and the thwarted explorers set about searching for another vessel. In Santiago they came upon a schooner of 32 tons, with an auxiliary motor—the Jose Enrique. This, as Dr. Bartsch pointed out, seemed to augur well, for the name of the first secretary of the Smithsonian Institution had been named the English equivalent of "Jose Enrique" or Joseph Henry.

With the Jose Enrique they returned to Guantanamo, where provisions and supplies were transferred from their first vessel and they began a cruise of the southern coast of Cuba, their objective being the Minnie Islands west of Cape Cruz. At Manzanilla they were detained two days by the authorities, because of the expected hurricane which had wrought such devastation in Santo Domingo. Upon their release they sailed west to Breton Cay from which site they headed for the Carman Islands, 820 miles south. Their new vessel proved thoroughly seaworthy; the crew was able, willing and not afraid of work, and in due time they made Cayman Brac without misfortune. This island, as well as Little Cay and Grand Cay, are British possessions and are located on a ridge almost midway between Cuba and Jamaica, a continuation of a wonderful fringe of islands. The three proved exceedingly fascinating to explore and from a natural history standpoint, for they yielded a mass of scientific plunder.

Northward they headed to Cayo Largo and then westward through a maze of keys and islands to the Isle of Pines, which was thoroughly explored by auto and boat. Across Cuba and Havana they made their way to Batabano and thence homeward with their treasures, sturdy muscles and several good coats of tropic tan.

"Let me show you some of these beautiful little creatures," offers Dr. Bartsch, and I follow him down a long hall to a room where a young woman sits at work before a desk littered with an artist's pens and paints and brushes. About her many stalks of punk are burning and incense curls in a blue smoke about her head. A decidedly disagreeable odor penetrates the atmosphere despite these precautions.

"They are still alive," Dr. Bartsch offers in explanation.

"I would have thought them very much dead," I tell him.

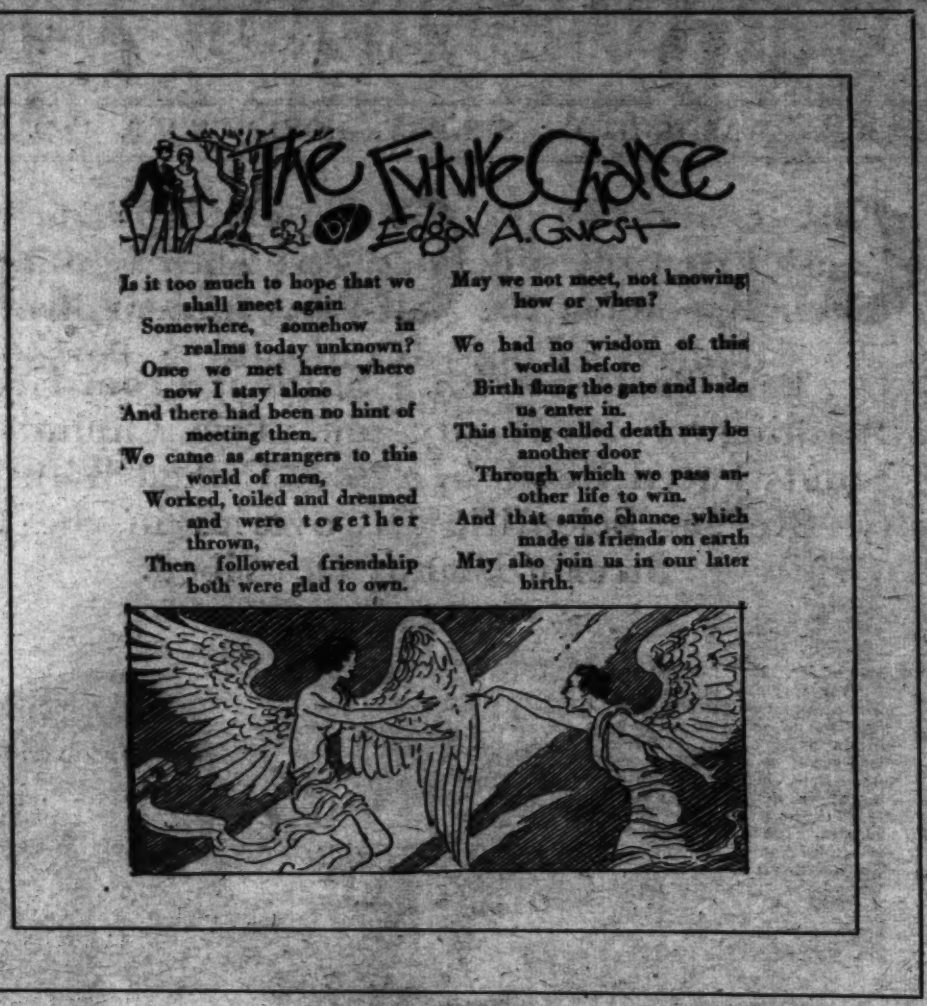
"You notice that I am limping," says Dr. Bartsch. "That is because I got one of those little island creatures in my foot and I am not disturbing him. I am letting him develop there so that we can use him as a specimen and study him." This is quite true. Dr. Bartsch is doing just that.

Tray after tray of exquisitely colored whorls and scrolls of palest yellow, deepest gold, faintest lavender and richest purple, he shows me. And tray on tray of tiny creatures that look like the tiny parts one sees scattered on a mechanic's tray—wee cogs and all.

"Genetically they are of much interest," says Dr. Bartsch, "for they give rise to many interesting conjectures concerning their origin. The tooth of time chewed away the land and left these little creatures fixed. One can trace their distribution from the Greater Antilles to South America. Their ancestors were also gypsies—like me—" he stops, smiles charmingly, and continues—"and you." Fossils in rocks show that the Pacific flowed once upon a time into the Caribbean and the Gulf and thus brought in fauna. There are many interesting stories of the migration and distribution of these little creatures. And they are more important than is at once evident. They have an economic importance.

"All through the West Indies, where there are fresh water pools, one comes upon fresh water mollusks that serve as hosts for parasitic worms that may infect beasts and men. On many of the islands there exist such parasites. There is one such in the United States which annually destroys $20,000,000 worth of sheep liver. More than dollars and cents are often involved—precious human life. One of the points I constantly keep in mind in my explorations is to discover the distribution of these parasites and the mollusk on which they must live for part of their life history. If they do not find the necessary mollusk, they must necessarily die. And by the destruction of this host we destroy the disease. By determining the condition of water, for instance, whether it is alkaline or acid—and by changing its alkalinity or acidity, we may stamp out the mollusks which live in that water. This is another method of eradicating parasites which promote disease.

"When we have obtained mollusks from all regions, securing descriptions of the living animals in the field and anatomic material for dissection in the laboratory, we are able to prepare monographs that enable us to find out what any mollusk may be. The next ten years I shall devote to writing up my findings, the results of these expeditions and will prepare the proper monographs. This will all be compared with the findings in another field—the field of earlier expeditions of mine, in the Philippines, whose fauna I collected from 1907 to 1910 and I hope to show then that the same laws always produce the same results in these two inland groups, separated by a world's diameter."



The Freighter Pays Off - By H. A. WOODMANSEE

When the Ocean Tramp Makes Voyage-End in New York Harbor, Sea Workers Get Their Own Thrills With Shore Money—While It Lasts.

TO thousands of ship workers port means the thrill that comes once in a cruise. The pay-off! The first money to spend in weeks, places to go, things to do. Release from sea routine, dissolution of sea friendships and enmities. To some it means the first glimpse of a strange metropolis. To others it means home-coming. To inveterate mariners it brings a holiday between voyages, and to many sea novices a definite end of wandering.

If you go aboard the average freighter with the pilot and listen in until the ship is tied to the pier and the last man has been paid off, you will have attended the commencement exercises of the University of the Sea.

The bosun and the officers have a hard time keeping some of the crew on their jobs. They hang over the rails, eating up the nondescript shores of Staten Island and Red Hook with hungry eyes. The chances are that they have not been ashore in weeks. They are in a happy mood. No more prison fare. No more confinement in a womanless world of painted steel and limitless brine.

The freedom of city streets again.

"There's the old burg," proclaims Slim, the oiler. "Tonight I'll be there with a hundred bucks in my pocket. No place like it!"

"It's crowded like a jail!" maintains an adolescent rowdy from the sticks known as Sleepy. "Wait till I get back home with my honey!"

"Jersey's a jungle," retorts the Manhattanite. "Nothin' the matter with them Jersey dames, 'cept their feet ain't flatter."

The bosun, known as Rum-dumb, approaches with a savage scowl.

"Why you no work?" he demands of Sleepy. "Why they ship no-good kids like you?"

"My old pal!" Sleepy retorts, pouncing on Rum-dumb and tickling him until he squeals like a guinea pig. Everybody laughs.

The messboy rings his dinner bell for the last meal on board.

"Turkey and strawberries today, boys," he announces with a wink.

"Out with it," retorts Big Bob, the seaman. "I get a real meal when I get ashore. And plenty of liquor to burn out the rotten grub we got this trip."

"This is my last trip," Big Bob announces. "I've been going to sea for four years. There's nothing in it. A ship is nothing but a floating jail."

"What ya going to do, Bob?" Slim inquires lazily.

"I'm going back to Cleveland and go to chauffeuring. If you get in with the right people, that's a good life. None of this bum food and always being broke."

Leo, the old Finnish seaman with the blond hair and walrus mustache and twinkling eyes, shakes his head.

"I ship right out again," he announces.

"How long you been going to sea, Leo?"

"Forty-six, forty-seven year. Ever since I was a leetle boy on farm in Finland."

"You ought to quit pretty soon. Maybe go to Sailors' Snug Harbor, eh?"

Leo laughs.

"No. That is for American seamen. When I quit, I go over the side."

"How come you never was an officer, Leo? You ain't dumb."

Leo laughs again.

"When I go ashore, I get drunk. Drunk. The companies will not have officer who gets drunk. So."

"Why don't you work ashore?" Big Bob wants to know. "You'd make more money."

A gleam comes into old Leo's eyes.

"Many times my friends ask me to stay ashore," he answers. "I say, 'No.' I do not like cities. In cities is dirt, noise. I like the sea."

The paymaster comes aboard. He sits at the big salon table, counting out the money, while the men silently file in and out. Forty dollars for this man, eighty for that one. It looks like wealth to them, but a week or two of holiday idling ashore will eat it up. Soon most of them will be back at the sea employment agencies desperately trying to get jobs.

Old Leo and Rum-dumb sit with the company gateman, puffing on their pipes, waiting for the bus to come and get them. Leo's eyes twinkle reminiscently as he watches the youngsters hurry up the road with the vast impatience of youth to get over the horizon and find out what lies on the other side.

"When dey are young, dey won't wait," he observes, spitting judiciously. "When I was young feller, I was like that. Not now!"

A Young Republic of Toddlers

Fathers and Mothers Can Watch the Little "Citizens" From the Sidelines, But They Cannot Put Their Spoons in the Self-Government Broth of the Children—School Is Actually a Personality Laboratory.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

A SELF-GOVERNING republic is to be found at 3209 Highland place northwest, in this city, where the "citizens" are tots from 2 to 3½ years old. Furthermore, while adults are welcome as observers, yet every problem of the Child Research Model Nursery School, located at that address, is finally worked out by the children themselves, according to the laws laid down in this unique assemblage of Washington children.

The Child Research Center is maintained by a grant from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Fund and in cooperation with the United States Government and child welfare agencies new theories of youth training are being evolved there.

"The citizens," so to speak, are the sons and daughters of senators, women wage earners, writers, artists, and are an average cross section of the infant population of the city. The center has been in operation since 1923, and the motive back of its establishment was to develop a center where various Federal and private agencies in this vicinity could cooperate in research projects and in the dissemination of information regarding development of children and where might be brought together specialists with varying points of view in the study of the growing child.

Those cooperating with the center include the Bureau of Home Economics of the Department of Agriculture, committee on child development of the National Research Council, University of Maryland, George Washington University, United States Public Health Service, American Association of University Women, American Home Economic Association and the United States Bureau of Education. These organizations are all represented on the executive committee of the center.

Little does this group of 50 or more youngsters realize that they comprise a laboratory for the study of child habits and character traits. While science gains from their study they learn to lead their little lives in such manner as will insure success for them later in life. It is a living exponent of the old saying: "As the twig is bent so is the tree inclined." Here social instincts are developed. The center is divided into a nursery school section for normal young children and a consultation for problem children. The two groups of children, of course, do not contain each other.

The center is directed by Mandel Sherman and in general it operates along lines of acceptance of evidence that the child at birth possesses little more than the capacity for physical development and intellectual growth and all of his characteristics develop as a result of training and experience. Therefore the first years of a child's life loom in importance as the time when the fundamentals of its personality are established. Self-reliance taught by example rather than precept is one of the first lessons given to the little ones at the center. The adults at the center, psychologists and child experts' have forgotten such inhibiting words as "Do" or "Do not." As invisible as a fairy wand they direct the actions of the children, letting them find the reasons for each act for themselves, and also why certain things are not done. It is remarkable how the youngest children respond to such treatment.

The directors and observers watch carefully the reactions of the children to the environment of the center. Later these observations will be summed up in reports which will prove of real value in the discussion and practical application of theories on child training and development. Miss Ishbel MacDonald, daughter of the British Premier, visited the Child Research Center while in Washington and expressed great delight in its operation.

Modern thinkers hold that the personality characteristics are developed in the child by the age of 2. Therefore the Child Research Nursery School admits them at that age to its classes, if such they may be called.

As the personality of 2-year-old children seldom is studied experts the world over are watching the Washington experiment with the keenest of interest.

On entering the center the personality of the child is closely studied and similar studies are made from time to time. A member of the staff cares for three or four of the children and weekly staff meetings are held where the behavior and development of every child in the center is discussed and plans outlined for their future treatment.

He pours his milk for himself, even if he does spill a bit sometimes.

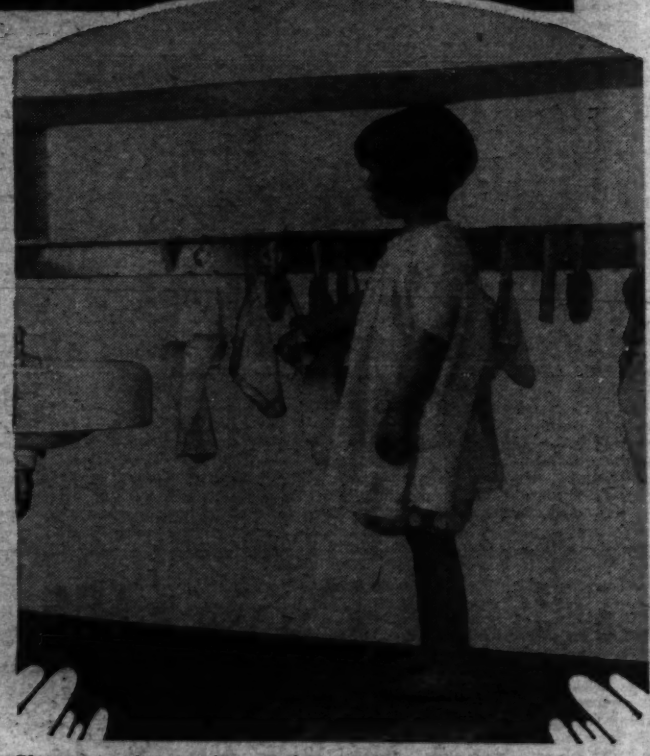
Only children with normal minds and bodies are admitted to the nursery school. A thorough mental and physical examination is given upon entrance, a physical examination each morning and intelligence tests are given at intervals during the year.

Signs of colds, fever or other physical ailments sends the children home at once. Every two weeks the child's weight is taken and recorded by the nutritionist, who thus regulates the amount of food intake of the child.

Of course, the utmost cooperation on the part of parents is necessary. Wrong diet at home and abatement of principles of self-reliance would undo all the school's work in a few hours. Therefore the directors insist that the parents be persons of intelligence and the homes normal ones.

The underlying motif of the school is to teach the children to wait on themselves, to play as freely and naturally as possible, and yet to exercise consideration for others. Child specialists intent on giving these children the priceless gifts of self-expression and decision which mean enriched and useful lives, come down to the children's level in order to get their real points of view and their habit development trends. In this connection it is interesting to note that these experts use the same small chairs and tables as the children. For they feel, no doubt, that the psychological opportunity of getting the real points of view of the children and their reactions would be impaired were the little bodies perched on adult-sized chairs to eat their luncheons or in playing games with the adults.

As personal orderliness is an acknowledged factor in an orderly point of view of life, stress is put on the development of this element in the characters of the children. Naturally, children of that age can not read. But each child is permitted to choose from an alluring array of small poster pictures of boys and girls, flowers, birds and designs the one which appeals most to him. The child experts are watching the selection carefully and note it down to appear, perhaps later, in a tome on child training or in a lecture on psychology.



She must select, and properly use, her own bathroom needfuls.

When the toddler has selected his individual insignia it appears on every piece of equipment used by that particular child. The gay little signs are placed above neat little rows of coat hooks, above the shelves where go rubbers and bath slippers, and in the washrooms above the washcloth and towel hooks. If by chance a hat or a bib or other article has not been carefully put away by the child he receives no helping hand in the tangle which ensues, and the school events move steadily onward, leaving him floundering about until he works his way out of the difficulty, even though he may lose his play time or be late for his luncheon because of it. Then is taught that most valuable lesson that he, and he alone, must pay for his own mistakes.

Luncheon time is a big moment in this Babyland Republic. It is the time of self-service and service to others in concentrated degree. The children eat at tiny tables for four, with a director at the head and three children. It is the duty of one of the tiny tots, whether 2 years old or 3½, to set these tables properly, bringing individual mats from a pile and placing the forks and spoons and pitchers of milk and glasses in place.

Child experts stationed at these tables learn many valuable things from watching the children perform this task.

When it is time to serve the meal one child from each table is designated as the waiter. He takes a tray from a pile on a table and from a low table presided over by a dietitian and receives on it a plate of luncheon worked out in cooperation with the Bureau of Home Economics on scientific lines. This tray of food he carries to a small side table. From there he places it before the director and then returns to go through the whole procedure over again to get trays of food for other children at the table.

When all are supplied the pitcher of milk is carefully passed about and each child pours his glass full. If there is an accident and food is spilled, the child immediately procures a mop and cloth and cleans it up before he can proceed either with his waiting or eating his own luncheon. The adults at each table are meticulously careful in eating their food, sometimes calling attention in a casual conversational manner to the fact that they are chewing their food most carefully, not taking too much in their mouths at one time so that they will be able to digest their food properly.

For the sake of mothers who have diet problems with their own children, a few of the luncheon menus used at the center are printed herewith. These were the menus served during a recent week.

It makes one hungry even to write them out!

Minor tragedies occur in this small republic some of them resulting in definite lessons in living. The day I visited the center a tiny waiter appeared at the serving table minus his self-adjusting apron-like bib. Quite politely he was informed that he did not have on his bib and he could not be served. He quickly went to the hook on which his bib should have hung. Alas, it was vacant. Again he appeared at the serving table followed by the reproachful eyes of the director at his table and the tiny boys and girls for whom he had to procure food. The other boys and girls kept right on eating their good luncheons. Once more the bibless waiter returned to the hook where his bib should be hanging. It was not there. The adults in the room could see his little orange flower bib hanging out of place under a red star sign farther down the row of hooks. Then the little fellow had a bright idea and he started down the row searching each hook until he pounced joyfully on his own orange flower article, put it on himself hastily and then got his plates of food, delivered them to the hungry folk at his table and at last sat down and enjoyed his own luncheon, a trifle winded, but triumphant. That lesson in social responsibility will not soon be forgotten by that tiny tot. His bib and design matched the next time he hung it up.

At another table during this luncheon a famous child expert watched out of the corner of his eye a girl of 3, with golden curls, playing with her food and looking about instead of eating it. "Well," he remarked casually, "I must finish my nice luncheon or I will not get any dessert." The other children at the table took the hint, but still Goldilocks dawdled. She was not ill, this had been ascertained, but there was a tardiness in her spirit that would increase with the years if not checked. The other children at the table were served with the Wild Life Returning to Haunts.

Protected Animals Have Actually Become a Menace to the Crops of Farmers and Ranchers in Some Sections—Good Hunting Is to Be Found in Many Eastern States, Even Near the Large Cities.

By ROBERT KENTON.

AN autumn day, clear and crisp; an open field, an aerie forest, a dog, a gun and a scent of game—what to the not-too-civilized is more evocative of elation? Hunting time is here, and persons who should know say shooting should be good this season.

Excepting waterfowl, wild game is probably more plentiful throughout the country this year than it was at any other time in the recent past. This is especially the case with that known as big game. While there is a much smaller totality of it than there used to be, big game still, or, rather, again, is found in all sections of the country. There are troublesome surpluses of some species of it, notably deer, in several localities.

"One is apt to associate big game hunting with the wilds of the Rockies or the steeps of the Sierra Nevada," says the publicity department of an Eastern railway company in calling attention to the fact that near its lines there is actually more big game than now can be found in many Western States.

In fact, the highly industrialized State of Pennsylvania now ranks way up on the list in the matter of big game. In that State there are literally more wild deer than they know what to do with, and the authorities say that in New York State there now are more of that species of big game than were there when Henrik Hudson first sailed up the river which bears his name.

"Virginia's wild life has a dollars and cents value, aside from its worth for recreational purposes, greater even than that of the forests," says Maj. A. Willis Robertson, chairman of the State's commission of game and inland fisheries.

Capt. John Smith, founder of Jamestown, noted the majestic presence of bison, or buffalo, at Great Falls, near what became the site of the Nation's Capital. As a big game animal within the range of hunters in this country, the buffalo has passed out, insuperably and irrecoverably. No longer is there room for it as such, though as a semidomesticated animal the buffalo is now on a surplus basis of increase. Only one really wild herd remains in the United States and there is not likely to be another. The surviving one is in Yellowstone Park, where there also is a large semidomesticated herd. The prong-horn or antelope has followed the bison into oblivion so far as game is concerned. But it, too, survives in a protected state.

But the buffalo is the only one of the country's indigenous big game animals whose perpetuation is threatened seriously by the crowding effects of civilized development. Second to it in majesty is the elk, great herds of which roamed most sections of the country when Capt. Smith was making his observations. Many persons will be surprised when told that elk still may be hunted in the open within a couple of hundred miles of the National Capital. Twelve were bagged by sportsmen in Pennsylvania, where a county is named for this picturesque game animal, last year; and the elk is among the big game that are listed officially as available to hunters in Virginia.

Most of us think of bears as mostly captives in zoos or rare denizens of swamps and mountains, or as the subjects of blood-curdling legends. Yet bears still can be hunted in most States. Five times as many of them were killed by hunters in Pennsylvania as in Wyoming during the last hunting season.

It is estimated officially that in Pennsylvania—which at the beginning of this century was almost bare of wild game—more than $10,000,000 is now spent annually by the sportsman type of hunters, that is, folk who hunt for the fun of it more than for what is killed.

A North Carolina official does some estimating that connotes not of mere sport. He says that game taken annually in his State has an aggregate value of around $2,000,000 in food value alone, and that the State might maintain under present conditions a wild game supply worth $130,000,000 on that basis of evaluation. The maximum of practicable supply would permit of the taking annually of many more than the 4,000,000 pieces of game which he says are shot or trapped during an average season there now.

The 4,000,000 items are made up mostly of small game, such as quail and partridge and rabbits and squirrels, as is the taking of game almost everywhere in this country. Not even the most eager estimators try to state in numbers the supplies of such game. If statable, the figures would be bewildering and misleading. It is not improbable that the quail-partridge population of the country compares favorably in the matter of numbers with that of chickens. The total of rabbits and squirrels living on their own in field and forest probably exceed that of captive swine. But such comparisons are annoying to true sportsmen who value game in terms of imponderable sport.

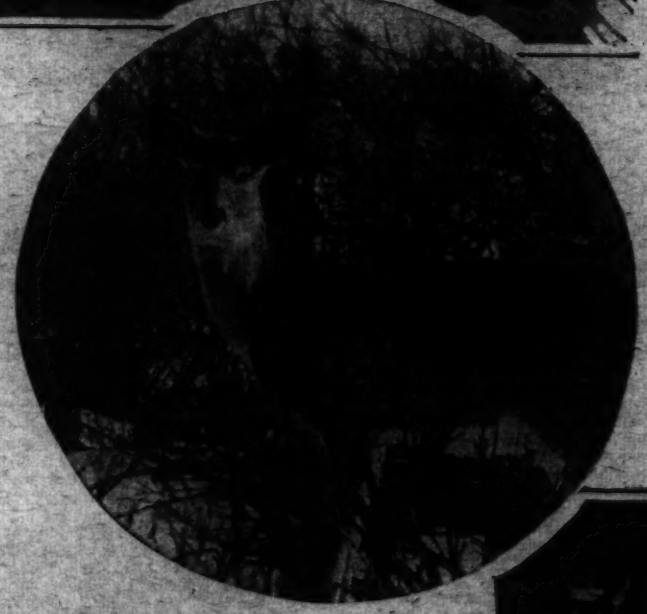
The mountain lion, cougar, is one of the few remaining foes of wild game not controlled by law and he pays the penalty.

Sportsmen, however, say all American game is much scarcer than it was even a generation ago and that supplies of it in future are beset by many threats. On few aspects of American life is there now brought to bear such an aggregate of protective concern.

There are scores of sportsman's organizations continuously crying out for the tightening of restrictions on the favorite recreation of their members and for increased promotional activity on behalf of wild game. A result is a volume of hunting laws and regulations larger than that having to do with railroads. There is no mere hunting season any more, but, rather, multifarious open seasons. These seasons vary as to dates and lengths, with reference to various kinds of game, and in different States, and even as to localities within most of the States. A compilation of hunting laws is now a necessary part of the equipment of every sportsman. One is put forth annually by the United States Biological Survey. Even it can not be trusted implicitly, for the game authorities of many States now have power to adjust regulations to changed conditions. Thus the open seasons for some game hunting were deferred recently in several Eastern States in order to reduce forest fire hazards which were augmented by drought conditions.



White-tailed deer in her spring dress, much lighter than the fall coat.

The hunting license is also a necessary article of shooting equipment practically everywhere. As a rule it may be omitted only when one hunts on one's own property. In nearly all the States nonresidents are charged much more than the local citizenry is for hunting licenses. In both Maryland and Virginia the nonresident must pay $15.50 for a general hunting permit, while the resident is required to pay only about one-third as much. In Maryland a nonresident owner of $500 worth or more of property in the State may get one for only a little more than charged the resident. The open seasons range from a few days to several weeks, depending on the game sought and the locality.

Limitations on the amounts of different kinds of game a hunter may take during a day or season are more restrictive than even the narrowed dates of open seasons. Almost every species of game is thus protected against promiscuous and wasteful slaughter. Even the cotton-tail rabbit is within the protective bounds of law in most localities.

Restrictions on the shooting of wild ducks and geese are much severer this season than in times past. The Federal Government maintains a regulatory control over the hunting of these migratory water fowl. This control is exercised by the Biological Survey. Federal Government regulations now limit a hunter's allowable daily kill to 15 ducks and 4 geese, whereas the limits formerly were 25 and 8, respectively. A more radical regulation goes into effect this season. It limits one's possessions of these game at one time to two days' full legal bags. Any State can go further, as some do, in the restricting of migratory water fowl hunting, but none may be more liberal than the Federal Government.

Tightening of restrictions on ducks and geese shooting is especially timely for the reason that drought conditions at their breeding grounds in Canada curbed natural increase of migratory water fowl this year. Like conditions in areas where the fowl winter and provide good shooting have curtailed the bodies of water to which they resort. This may cause concentrations that will present appearances of an unusually large supply of water fowl. Biological Survey authorities are urging hunters to be conservative, even within the new regulations, in their shooting of this game.

The opinion of most authorities is that the extraordinary and widely prevalent drought of this year abetted increase of many kinds of game, though this is offset somewhat by losses caused by forest fires brought about by the drought.

Anyway, the authorities say that, considering all kinds, there should be more wild game in the country now than probably at any previous time in the last 25 years. During the past quarter of a century there evolved most of the elaborate system of conservation, propagation and regulation by which the greater part of the country's wild life is now governed publicly and by which hunting has been turned into what is now almost a pure sport. Millions of acres of land have been turned into bird and game refuges and reserves. Thousands of animals have been bred under controlled conditions and used for the restocking of areas that had been rendered virtually gameless by the free hunting long characteristic of life throughout the country.

In Pennsylvania there now are 38 State game refuges surrounded by 170,000 acres of public shooting grounds. In addition there are a million and a half acres of State forests open to hunters. In the State of Wisconsin 334,927 acres of land are in public game reserves. In Idaho more than three million acres have been set aside for the protection and propagation of wild life.

There are many Federal Government bird refuges throughout the country and the number is being increased. The national forests are in most part a series of vast public hunting grounds, over which, as to shooting, State governments have jurisdiction. The Wichita National Forest in Oklahoma is a Federal game reserve for chiefly elk and buffalo, both of which are so numerous there that annual surpluses have to be disposed of. Also there are surpluses of buffalo on the National Bison Range in Montana and in Yellowstone National Park. On none these reserves or elsewhere in this country can the animal be hunted.

But elk and other big game may be hunted in the national forests of the Far West, where more than 75 per cent of big game range is

The antelope (pronghorn) is one of the daintiest and wariest of all American big game.

A New Union Within the Union

Uncle Sam's Thousands of Employes Organize, Pledging Themselves Never to Strike—Ends Obtained by Pacific Methods of Logical Presentation of Requests—National Federation Includes Nearly All Classes of Workers From Laborers to Scientists.

By H. A. ERNEST.

LIKE employes in private industry, the men and women who hold positions in the Federal Government found that in numbers there is strength. They found this not only was emphatically true but peculiarly applicable to their condition. One $1,400 a year Government clerk can not expect to get very far as an individual. Political backing may go a long way, but only with the few individuals who possess it.

The mass of Federal employes have learned the futility of depending on the dubious fortunes of individual politicians. The latter are in Washington today, but tomorrow they may be back in local obscurity with their proteges left high and dry. The union was the logical result and it was formed, but pledged never to strike.

As employes of the world's greatest business organization and richest country, whose infinitely varied functions are performed by men and women who range from the more humble charwomen and janitorial forces to bespectacled gentlemen with a string of academic degrees after their names, Federal workers present an unique problem, especially when one thinks of them organizing into labor unions. There is the sizeable task of fusing not only different personalities but thousands of persons who are doing jobs that are as varied as anything under the sun.

The Federal employe has been looked upon as an individual who had a "soft" job, as a man with no purpose or ambition in life, but to remain on the Government's pay roll. And so there has existed the need for educating a wrongly informed public to the fact that Government workers are men and women like themselves. They are ambitious to get ahead, to better themselves, to make a career out of what is regarded as a sinecure.

One needs only to converse with a few of the men and women who are hard at work for Uncle Sam to learn what their jobs mean to them. Among innumerable specialists, few may be found who are thinking of their work in terms of compensation. If they did, the Civil Service Commission at Washington would find it an even more difficult task to keep the highly specialized positions filled in competition with the demand for trained workers in private industry.

And the most skeptical person comes away from a chat with a Federal employe profoundly impressed with the latter's sincerity of purpose. He wonders all the more why it is that Government workers have had to put up such a strenuous battle for their rights. But they found it necessary to organize, to join the American labor movement, but with the stipulation that they would never leave their employer without the necessary personnel, but stay on the job while they pressed their demands.

Although the American Federation of Labor will celebrate its golden jubilee next year and the last few decades have composed an era in which organized effort has been the key to the worker's advancement, Federal employes have organized in comparatively recent years. There were groups of them in organizations not affiliated with the A. F. of L., and even when they did join, it was a matter of keeping that fact in the background.

Prior to 1912, Government employes could organize, but with little more than a fraternal purpose. They did not have the right to petition Congress directly, but could do so only with the approval of their superiors. Since frequently they were complaining against the latter, the method obviously was futile.

It was not until the adoption of the Lloyd-La Follette amendment to the Postoffice appropriation act, approved August 24, 1912, that the way to collective action was opened. This measure was sponsored by the American Federation of Labor and provided as follows:

"The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress, or any member thereof, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to any committee or member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with."

Postal workers organized 50 years ago, but theirs was not a labor union as it is known today. At first they were formed mainly for fraternal benefit, or similar purposes. And today there are four postal groups now affiliated with the labor movement: The National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, the Railway Mail Association, the National Federation of Rural Carriers, and the National Association of Letter Carriers.

These organizations, however, exist for members in these particular classes of employment. But the association which has succeeded in amalgamating in its membership employes of every other department of the United States Government is the National Federation of Federal Employes. No other group affiliated with the labor movement comprises workers in so many varied occupations.

It began, as many successful organizations do, from an humble origin. It had its source in several separate unions of the American Federation of Labor. But this plan of organization was patently unsatisfactory. There was no other group of workers so diverse in their occupations and in the problems incident to their work.

It was on September 17, 1917, that the National Federation of Federal Employes was formed in the executive council chamber of the American Federation of Labor. There were 47 delegates from 33 local unions of Federal employes in various parts of the country. A national charter was granted by the parent labor body and the movement to unionize Federal workers had begun.

A year later the membership in the federation stood at about 10,000. Today it is well above 50,000, and each year brings proportionately greater increases. During the present year a membership campaign has been in progress and by the end of 1930 many more thousands will have joined their efforts to the task of presenting a large numerical strength to Congress in voicing employe demands.

The federation has spread its activities throughout the United States and its territorial possessions. Its organization is markedly diverse in a geographical way. Union No. 1 is in San Francisco, while No. 2 is in Washington, D. C. There are unions also in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, New Orleans, Portland, Oreg.; Atlanta, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo.; Houston, San Antonio, Los Angeles, San Diego, Spokane, Seattle, Denver, Memphis, Louisville, Providence, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Detroit, Milwaukee, Portland, Me.; Buffalo, Indianapolis, Omaha, Rochester, N. Y.; Nashville, Columbus, Ohio, and in many other smaller cities and towns. There are 375 in all and many function far from the larger centers of population.

Unions exist in the Panama Canal Zone, in Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii and even in Alaska. One of the newer locals has its headquarters in Paris, France, where it was organized among the employes of the American Embassy. It has grown to include foreign service employes in other parts of Europe and Asia, Africa and South America. One interesting point made by a member is that those who belong to the Paris union hear daily 2,400 languages and dialects.

At the first convention the constitution adopted set forth the object of the federation as follows:

"The objects of this federation shall be to advance the social and economic welfare and education of the employes of the United States and to aid in the perfection of systems that will make for greater efficiency in the various services of the United States. The methods for attaining these objects shall be by petition to Congress, by creating and fostering public sentiment favorable to proposed reforms, by cooperation with Government officials and employes, by legislation and other lawful means; provided, that under no circumstances shall this federation engage in or support strikes against the United States Government. With a view of coordinating the energies and influence of all Federal employes in support of our aims, we strongly urge them and all national organizations of Government employes to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor to secure complete cooperation and cohesive action of all interested in the common cause, under one joint jurisdiction."

This provision in its entirety today remains in the federation's constitution.

Eligibility of Government workers to this organization was defined in the following manner:

"Any person employed in the civil branch of the United States Government, the District of Columbia or the insular possessions, except those in the Postal Service (not including those in the Executive Department) and those exclusively eligible to membership in any other existing national or international organization affiliated to the American Federation of Labor, is eligible to membership in this federation: provided, that local unions shall have the right to allow members of their organizations who have separated themselves from the service to retain membership."

The new organization which had so varied a family of needy children set to work to attack the major problems then confronting Uncle Sam's personnel. At the first convention, held the following year, there were 19 Federal employes' unions in existence and the list of matters for consideration was imposing. It included:

Reclassification of positions in the Federal service, retirement, minimum wage, adequate travel allowance, percentage increase in compensation, removal of prohibition on transfers, compensation for occupational disease, support of the President in war overtime work, equal suffrage, six-day week, overtime pay, greater political liberty and a civil service court of appeals.

Before the organization of the National Federation of Federal Employes, Government workers had not obtained a single benefit of general application in more than 60 years. Working hours had been increased, and, during two decades, efforts to secure enactment of a retirement law had been unsuccessful. Nor had there been success in endeavors to obtain a reclassification of the civil service which provided uniform standards of duties and pay.

Moreover, Federal employes had been expressly forbidden by executive orders of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft from appealing to Congress on matters concerning their employment. It is small wonder that Congress had become indifferent to the vast army of public service workers, or that a new representative on coming to Washington was shunted to the civil service committee as an assignment on which he could learn the "ropes" while being expected to do very little.

These same Presidents, Roosevelt and Taft, are on record, however, in favor of union principles. Said Roosevelt: "I believe in the union, and I believe that men who are benefited by the union are morally bound to help to the extent of their power in the common interests advanced by the union." And Taft declared that "the right of workers to organize in trade unions and to bargain collectively through chosen representatives is recognized and affirmed."

Later Presidents have approved the principle for Federal employes. Calvin Coolidge sent this message to a convention of the National Federation of Federal Employes: "Please extend to the convention my best wishes for the success and enlarged public service of your federation and my assurance of a desire to cooperate with you in promoting the welfare of those in Government employ."

President Hoover sent this message to the last convention of the organization: "Please extend my cordial greetings to the National Federation of Federal Employes at their biennial convention and say for me that I share their zeal and pride in our common effort to be of all possible usefulness in the public service."

What have Government workers gained by unionizing? Here is a partial list of what their National Federation has accomplished:

The Borland law, providing for an increase in working hours, without extra compensation, was appealed by them to President Wilson and given his veto.

Three salary bonuses, finally amounting to $240 a year were obtained, and this sum was added by the reclassification act to their basic salaries, representing a permanent addition of $11,000,000. At the same time, efforts in Congress to have the bonuses reduced were defeated.

The Sterling-Lehlbach classification act was passed. Under this law, enacted in 1923, representing the work of the joint Congressional Commission on classification, thousands of positions in the departmental services in Washington were classified and standards of duties to be performed were established and compensation for them fixed. The classification act was in fact drafted by the National Federation of Federal Employes, and the same organization financed much of the research and technical studies because of a shortage of public funds available for that purpose.

Retirement, first the subject of congressional action in 1920, has been successively improved until at the last session of Congress a law was placed on the statute books committing the Federal Government to a contribution of $30 a year for each year of service up to 30, and permitting employes to receive an annuity commensurate with their salaries.

It is no secret in Washington

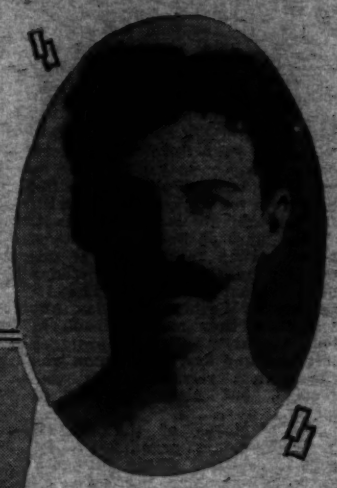
Won a Job by Punching a President

William McKinley Mooney Was in a Backwash, So Far as Promotion Was Concerned, Until He Uppercut President Roosevelt, and Now Everybody, of Course, Knows He's Capital's Postmaster—Hunting His Hobby.

By A. H. ULM.

President Roosevelt's fighting face, the way he probably looked when he said, "Hit me as if you meant it."



Mr. Mooney, as he looked when he went job hunting, with his right prepared to counter, if necessary, with his left for the long count.

Mr. Mooney and a companion down in the Virginia hills after turkeys.

THERE are many ways of getting promoted, and also of not getting promoted, in the Government service; and, as many of the thousands in that service will tell you more or less confidentially, all of those ways are not in line with the exalted maxims we used to copy when learning to use a pen. Probably the most singular of tried ways is that of landing with one's fist an uppercut blow on the chin of a President of the United States. The method was used once by a man who still is among Uncle Sam's civil servitors. His name is William McKinley Mooney, and he is now the National Capital's postmaster.

"It's sort of like recalling another age, such as that of the Greeks or Romans," said Mr. Mooney, in his spacious office near the Union Station, "though in the matter of years it wasn't so long ago. I went up to the Y. M. C. A. the other day to inquire about my getting into a gym class of serious-minded exercisers. It made me feel like a ghost issuing from an ancient past to haunt old scenes. You know the Columbia Athletic Club preceded the Y. M. C. A. in that building, or the main part of it, on the corner of G and Eighteenth streets northwest. Think of my going back there for light exercises!" He dug from a drawer a yellowed clipping from The Washington Post and chuckled as he handed it to the writer.

"A New Athletic Star," was the first line of the heading on the clipping and the second line was: "Mooney springs into prominence by defeating Von Lindgren."

It happened in the 'nineties at the Columbia Athletic Club. The athletically elite of Washington were there. One enthusiastic observer was a young man who at the time was helping to run the United States Civil Service Commission. His name was Theodore Roosevelt.

A half dozen years elapsed, and that man, while taking an oath to serve properly as President of the United States, crossed the vague but sometimes vivid line that runs between youth and middle age. The hero of that night at the Columbia Athletic Club still was occupationally an humble clerk in one of the departments and wondering how he might procure a promotion that he needed and felt he deserved.

"Go straight to the White House and make your appeal," a brother on the staff of a New York newspaper advised. But the man who had downed all comers in the local fistic ring, around which amateur sports in the Washington of the 'nineties revolved, thought it a dangerous if not impossible suggestion.

"I'll use my professional influence to get you to the President and I will go with you," said the brother.

Through the President's secretary an appointment was arranged and, with thumping hearts, the two brothers were at the White House promptly to keep it. On the minute they were ushered into the office of the President.

"Step into that room there and I'll be with you in a moment," said the President, who was signing papers. The visitors went into the room and waited. A few moments later the President bounded in and with a heavy slap of his hand on "Bill" Mooney's shoulder said:

"Ah! The boxer; the chap who defeated Von Lindgren and the very man I wanted to see! Show me how you did it."

"It is rather difficult to explain," Mooney replied, diffidently.

"Don't explain; show me; here; right now," commanded the President, as he assumed a sparring pose.

Summoning all the courage he possessed, the young man sent his right fist gently to the Presidential jaw. "Not that way," Roosevelt demurred. "Hit me as if you meant it." Then Mooney dealt a real one.

"Bully!" Now let me try it on you," which he did. The two sparred for several minutes.

"I have it," concluded the President, "and I'm going to use it on Garfield (a member of the Cabinet) tonight and won't he be surprised?"

"Do you know jiu jitsu?" he inquired. Mooney said no. The President proceeded to explain to his callers the system of Japanese trick wrestling which he, Roosevelt, was endeavoring to popularize in this country. He tried it on them and wrestled old style with the boxer, to whom he expressed the wish that he come to the White House and wrestle with him regularly.

"This job doesn't allow me time and opportunity for enough exercise," said he, "and I need the help you can give me. I am terribly overweight, especially here," pointing to his waistline. Finally, he asked:

"Is there anything I can do for you boys?"

The reason for their calling on him was stated. The President made a note and said to the boxer brother:

"A man who can box as you ought to have any job he wants, and if the Postmaster General hasn't picked his own son for it that place you wish will be yours in a few days."

And that is how Mr. Mooney, now Washington postmaster, got his first important step-up in the Federal Civil Service, in which he has been during practically all of his active working life. Upon his appointment six years ago as postmaster, Mooney was chief clerk of the Postoffice Department. He no longer boxes or takes part in other formal athletics. But he faithfully maintains active allegiance to a sport peculiarly American and now having comparatively few skilled followers. It is that of wild turkey hunting.

"I'm getting my things together for my regular autumn outing in the wild turkey regions of Virginia," said Mr. Mooney the other day. "Jim Bishop writes me from Albermarle County that this game is plentiful. The dry spring was good for young turkeys in the bush. Bishop is one of the best turkey hunters that ever lived. Col. Roosevelt went with me once to hunt with Bishop, and it was among the colonel's regrets that he never mastered the difficult art of yelping, which is that of imitating the call of wild turkeys. These birds are the shyest of creatures and you must use ingenuity and skill in order to get a shot at one. I never saw Col. Roosevelt happier than he was one day when he got one on the wing."

A native of Steubenville, Ohio, where his father was a banker, Mooney as a youth ran away from home to clinch a Government job at the National Capital.

"Essentially, it is the old, old story of thousands of Government employes," says he. "A Steubenville man who had been appointed auditor of one of the departments here asked me if I didn't want to be his secretary. My father told me not to consider it. But the pay was good for one of my age then, and I thought a year or two of experience in the Government would be of educational value. Of course, I, like all the others, intended to make something else my life work. But my father, who had been comfortably well to do, lost what he had. My obligations grew, the work wasn't hard, life here—especially in the sparkling 'nineties—was pleasant, and I stayed on, and am here yet."

In his early Washington days Mooney went in eagerly for amateur sports, which attained a sort of local golden age under the suzerainty of the old Columbia Athletic Club. All of the gay young blades belonged to the club, which in addition to its town house and gym had a field place on Analostan Island. The country club was then an exclusive possession of society and golf was an idle amusement for the elderly rich. Red-blooded men looked on tennis as effeminate. Columbia Athletic Club members boxed and wrestled, indulged in tugs of war, and over on the island they ran and jumped. Of course, they swam, but as a matter of course and not much as a sport. It was on the island that Owen did the 100-yard dash in 10 seconds, then a world record.

Mooney was a tumbler, a boxer and a wrestler; and, also, on occasions calling for it, he sang. For long he was well known athletically for bodily form; Roosevelt rated him the handsomest athlete he had ever seen. Boxing was the prize sport at the athletic club, where local championships were strived for in bouts of vigorous kinds that now rarely occur. The localities were much chagrined when a foreigner-resident, E. von Lindgren, attained the light heavyweight championship and along with it a reputation as the best fighter in Washington. Mooney was matched against him.

"From the start the sport was vicious," says The Washington Post report of it, "and Mooney astonished the crowd by his cleverness. He caught Von Lindgren under the chin and the latter reeled and fell headlong under the rope and off the stage. Persons in the audience caught him and broke the fall. A rest was taken for one minute and the second round began, but it lasted only a few minutes. Mooney got in another uppercut which landed fair and dazed Von Lindgren. The latter had enough and the referee gave the match to Mooney amid great cheering."

Later Mooney defeated H. M. ("Tubby") Dickinson, a local heavyweight champion, but it was the bout with Von Lindgren that caused him to become not many years later the boxing partner of a President. Following the meeting told already, Mooney used to often go directly from his desk at the Postoffice Department to the White House and put in an hour or two boxing and wrestling in the basement with the head of the Nation. Roosevelt was then in his middle forties and, as always, an enthusiast for the strenuous life.

"He was by no means a great athlete," says Mr. Mooney, reminiscently. "But considering the fact that as a youngster he was frail and rather puny he, at an age when few men box, did very well

AMERICA'S GREATEST SOLDIER

Pershing So Called Fighter of the Old Pioneer Type Who Cleaned Out Five German Machine Gun Nests—Capt. Woodfill Retired After Thirty Years Service as Sergeant Is Now a Farmer.

By LOWELL THOMAS.

PERSHING called him America's greatest soldier. And that's the keynote when you're talking about Sam Woodfill—soldier, the very type and figure of the old-time American infantryman. He performed a colossal exploit in battle, and got the Congressional Medal of Honor for it. He ranks as one of America's war heroes. But it is the character of Woodfill that strikes me the most, his blood-curdling war adventure, set before a background of his personification, for better or for worse, of the professional fighting man of the line.

Well, at the present moment Woodfill is lying in an Illinois hospital fighting for his life once more. He was badly gassed those savage days a dozen years ago, and gas leaves subtle effects. He is a good patient—tranquil, stolid, never complaining. Perhaps he looks back a little on the times of his glory—but only a little, no flaming dreams, for he is not an imaginative man.

Let's look at a contrast. Woodfill's exploit was one simple and desperate manslaughter. It might go well with the killer type, but that's not Woodfill. He is a great, rustic kind of chap, but mild, kindly, and of a heavy, almost tender humanity. No hatred of the Germans lay hard and cold in him. The real soldier didn't hate. He liked the Germans. Why not? Sam Woodfill is part German anyhow. He is not proud of the men he slew, nor yet has he any sentimental regret—as you will find sometimes in the moodier, more swaggering, more pugnacious type of warrior. His own heroic good fortune, the other man's perhaps heroic misfortune—these are accepted with an unquestioning, leathery stolidity, the leathery stolidity of the American pioneer.

And that's what Sam Woodfill is—an old-time pioneer, by some miracle brought back and thrown into the middle of the bloody fire-swept ground of the Argonne.

He is tall and stalwart, with a long face, and weatherbeaten. Physically he is the very picture of the two characters I have given him; the old-time American soldier and the old-time American pioneer. He was an old-timer in the Army, a sergeant. And he is of pioneer stock. His forbears were Indian fighters. Sam, too, lived a pioneer life. For years he was in the Army up in Alaska, pioneering along the Arctic Circle.

This is his story: An American pioneer in the World War, a sort of Daniel Boone left over in this modern age, a Daniel Boone with a rifle thrown into a modern war of machine guns, giant cannons, airplanes, tanks and poison gas. For Sam is essentially a rifleman. As an Indiana farm boy he was brought up on squirrel shooting, and then for years he tracked big game and became a famous hunter in Alaska.

He had the temporary rank of captain when he was leading a company in the Argonne. The Germans were fighting savagely. Men were dropping all around. Sam's company had run into a concentration of machine gun fire.

Then Sam did a thing that can be explained by using only one word—pioneer. It was prompted by instinct come down from Indian fighting ancestors, an instinct cultivated by years of stalking game. He went out alone and attacked a series of machine gun nests, one after another, single-handed, stalking the enemy the way the pioneers used to fight Indians, the way Sam himself had bagged caribou, moose and bear in Alaska.

Crawling along the ground like an Indian, Sam slid into a shell hole. Bullets grazed the dirt in front of him. There were three machine gun nests nearby. One in a church tower. He couldn't see the gunners, just the little window from which they were firing. He drew a bead on the window and pulled the trigger. Then he fired again—a third and a fourth time. The typewriter rattle of the machine gun ceased.

There was another gun in a stable. A board had been removed. From a hole enemy machine gun bullets rattled out in a staccato stream. Sam silenced that one, too—by shooting through the hole.

Enemy fire was now coming from a machine gun straight in front. He couldn't quite locate it. Still flat on his stomach, he worked round a knoll. Forty feet in front was a clump of bushes. Out of it stuck a vibrating muzzle. Sam slid his rifle over a heap of gravel. He couldn't see the gunners. Then he caught a glint of light behind the muzzle. A square helmet! He pulled the trigger. The helmet disappeared. A shadow moved, a second man taking his dead comrade's place. Sam again pulled the trigger. The second man dropped. Another appeared, and met the same fate. Four times a man took a dead comrade's place to work that gun. Those Germans were game. There was no doubt about that. Every man of the gun crew lay on the ground except one. He tried to escape. Sam picked him off as he ran.

Sergt. Samuel Woodfill.

His Fighting Days Are Over.

SERGEANT WOODFILL'S friends say he is a man "born out of due season," and his hands and disposition seem more fitted to the long squirrel rifle of Kentucky and the solemn, menace-filled silences of primeval forest than to the modern Springfield and the peaceful quiet of an Indiana farm. Woodfill himself makes no comment and if he remembers the day when Gen. Pershing called him "America's Greatest Soldier" he never refers to it.

Sergt. Woodfill, late Capt. Woodfill, is content to be called to greet the sun by a strutting rooster rather than by a bugler turning honest breath into the detestable "I can't get 'em up, I can't get 'em up" of reveille. Twelve years ago it was a command; now it is a memory which the rooster lustily keeps alive. Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, ended war-time reveille and all that for Farmer Woodfill, and several million others.

Woodfill knew his own men were coming up behind him now. But he pushed on ahead. Suddenly he stumbled over a green gray figure. Another dead man. Huh! Not quite. It jumped up and drew a Luger. Sam shot first.

Ahead was another machine gun nest. Sam crept upon it and picked off the gunners just as he had done before. Then he ran over. As he did so he stumbled into three ammunition carriers. They threw up their hands. He took their arms and sent them back.

There was still one more position from which the Germans were cutting down Americans with rapid fire. Sam silenced it the same as before. Five in all was the number of machine gun nests that this reincarnation of Daniel Boone attacked and put out of commission that day. After the last one he pushed on into the enemy lines and jumped into a trench where he found two Germans.

And now occurred a swift climactic fight. Woodfill shot down the first German. The second was leveling his rifle. Sam's pistol missed fire. He closed with the man, and as he did so grabbed a trench tool, a short mattock, which was lying on the side of the trench. He struck a savage blow with it. The German fell. And at that moment Sam saw the man he had shot rising to a crouching position. In his death agony the German soldier was bringing up his Luger to kill his killer. Woodfill leaped upon him and cracked him down with the trench tool.

No wonder Sam got the Congressional Medal! No wonder Pershing called him America's greatest soldier! Then at the end of the war he was mustered out. His captain's commission was temporary—one of those jawbone commissions. The Army was his only life. He reenlisted as a private and became a sergeant once again. After he had been a captain, that was a come-down. Of course the Army couldn't keep all those wartime officers, but one suspects they might have made an exception in the case of "America's greatest soldier." But Woodfill did not complain. He was too much of a soldier. He always accepted things.

Woodfill remained practically unknown, even in Army circles, until 1921, when the great ceremony of the Unknown Soldier was held. Among the pallbearers was to be a group of the outstanding soldiers of the A. E. F., and Gen. Pershing was to select them. A committee reviewed 3,000 citations, the records of 3,000 men who had been honored during the war. From these they selected 100. Gen. Pershing went over the final list and picked out the pallbearers. Sergt. York was one of these. Another was Col. Whittlesey of the Lost Battalion. When Gen. Pershing came upon Samuel Woodfill's name he said:

"Why, I have already selected that man as the outstanding soldier of the A. E. F."

So Woodfill came to Washington. He was welcomed by the President, and Congress adjourned in his honor. He was banqueted by the members of the House and Senate and in New York he was presented to Marshal Foch. Foch said he was happy to meet the first soldier of America, and Woodfill replied that he was happy to meet the first soldier of the world. A brief step into the limelight and Woodfill returned to his Army post, a mere sergeant among sergeants once more.

Several years ago, having served his full stretch of over 30 years, which entitled him to his pension, he was retired. Although he had been a captain they retired him only as a sergeant. He has a little home at Fort Thomas, Ky., and he and his wife have a small farm in Indiana, just over the line, not far from Cincinnati. He farmed out there, like any other farmer, and worked in a steel mill to make up the deficit on the farm, till old effects of war brought him down recently and to the hospital.

I like to think of Woodfill as a Daniel Boone come down as an atavism into a modern world. He makes a curious study.

Won a Job By Punching a President

with the gloves. However, good athletes are born more than made. The colonel wanted to be one, and out of the desire there came what often partook of being bravado on his part. He used to tell me to put my best in blows given him, but I never thought of doing it. He already was much overweight, and he particularly resented his expanding waistline. No matter how hard he worked the line would not shorten much.

"When boxing or engaging in any other form of physical exercise his mind seemed never to be on another thing. No sense of presidential dignity bothered him on those occasions.

"I've often wondered what would have occurred had a Secret Service man happened to have looked through a window and seen us boxing and wrestling that day when with my brother I first met the colonel. He no doubt would have thought that I was trying to murder the President.

"I doubt if Col. Roosevelt overdid the strenuous life, as he called it, though he ought to have lived longer than he did. My own opinion is that his life was shortened by the fever he contracted when on the exploring expedition in South America.

"Always democratic, the colonel liked the dramatic even in his playing. Occasionally he took me on walking jaunts. Once we were going through Rock Creek Park with a group of Army officers on duty as students at the War College. Heavy rains had fallen and when we came to it the creek was much swollen. The day was rather cold. But the colonel, in the lead, plunged into the stream as if it were not there and, of course, all others followed him. Then we clambered up a hill and got out of the park. The White House carriage was awaiting the President and there was a wry smile on his face as he got in and was driven away, leaving the others who, in soaked garments, had to walk about 4 miles before they could get into dry clothing.

"Although he liked his joke and was a bit given to athletic fads, like that of jiu jitsu, Col. Roosevelt was a good sport in every sense of the word. On the wild turkey hunt he was like a city boy on his first outing in the open."

Framed and hanging on a wall in his office at the postoffice there is a letter that Mr. Mooney received from Col. Roosevelt in 1913. It was in reply to one suggesting that he send to Jim Bishop, who had been their guide on the wild turkey hunt, a copy of the colonel's book about his big game hunting year in Africa and mentioning incidentally the fact that he, Mooney, had just been out hunting with Bishop and had killed a 20-pound turkey.

"Evidently straight shooting and hard hitting can be combined in one person," Col. Roosevelt wrote back. "I have seen you knock out a human antagonist and I envied you your capacity then, but I envy you the 20-pound turkey even more." Yes; he would send a copy of the book to Bishop, a fine fellow, and wonderfully adept as a yelper.

"I saw the volume not long ago," says Mr. Mooney. "It is treasured like something sacred. Everybody in the locality has read it, some of them many times.

"Only about 20 years time has passed since the contents of the book were appearing in a magazine. Yet what vast changes have come about since then in life, in the world, in the country and this city! But it was not much longer after that I passed the half way point in my connection, so far, with the Government service. Nearly 40 years of it—and I'm going still."

"But you are not boxing or wrestling any more?"

He laughed.

"No; a little hunting, a bit more of fishing, more still of walking are about all the athletics I engage in now. I have never had a golf stick in my hands." The last remark was uttered in a tone reminiscent of the vibrant 'nineties when John L. Sullivan was a greater national hero than either Bobbie Jones or Babe Ruth is now.

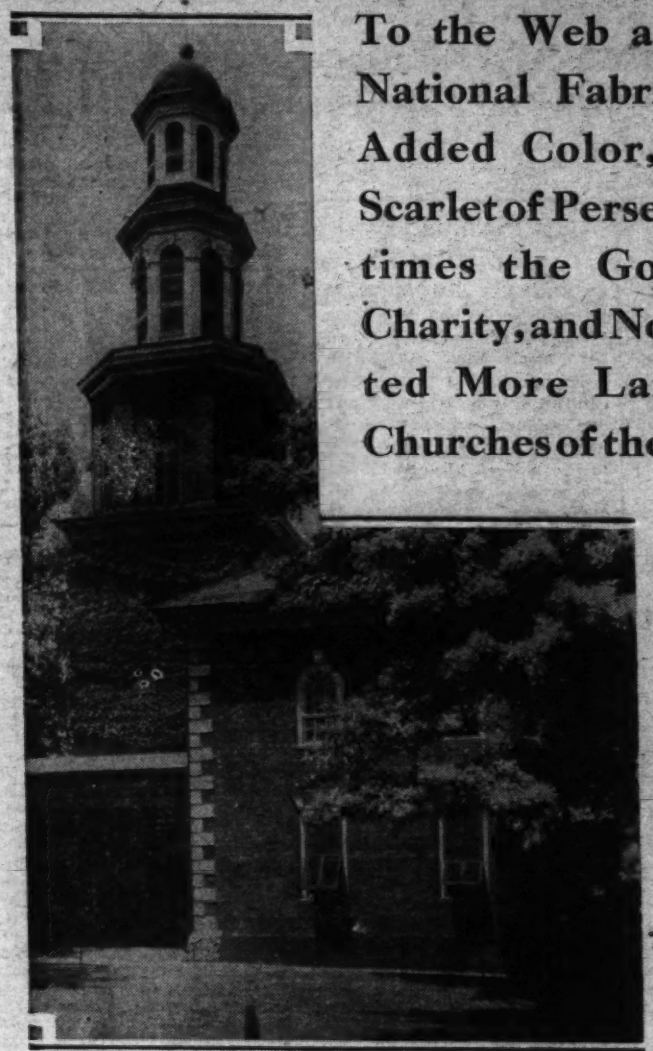
"Theodore Roosevelt demonstrated that anybody can find time to play, and that anyone can play hard, even at many games, and achieve to the full in other spheres. He played as hard as he worked or read or studied. All life was to him an adventure, and I am glad that I had a chance of sharing a little of one aspect of it with him."

"But do you recommend punching a President on the chin as a method of getting promoted in the Civil Service?" he was asked.

"Hardly!" he replied with a smile. "I doubt if I'd do it now. I'd be afraid of a Secret Service man looking in through the window. But when we are young . . ."

A subordinate put a mass of official papers before him.

The Colonial Churches of V i



Christ Church, in which George Washington worshiped and which he served as vestryman.

To the Web and Woof of Our National Fabric Religion Has Added Color, Sometimes the Scarlet of Persecution and Sometimes the Gold of Christian Charity, and None Has Contributed More Largely Than the Churches of the "Old Dominion."

EVERY visitor to Washington, it would seem, makes a pious pilgrimage to Alexandria, the home town of our first and greatest man, for no other purpose than to view old Christ Church, to enter its sacred portals and sit in the pew which the immortal George and Dame Martha occupied, and to wander through the churchyard and read the inscriptons on the time-scarred and moldy old tombs.

This is an instinct in civilized man to which the secular historian has paid scant attention. In this debunking age—a gross, materialistic, irreverent age—it is rather ennobling to learn most people have some religious impulse, and that they are inspired as much by the spiritual life of their heroes as they are by their mighty deeds on the Campus Martius or in the forum of statecraft and legislation.

Washington himself was so inspired. With all his frailties—and he, too, was human—his faith in God was great and his loyalty to the church carried him far. He was not only a vestryman of Christ Church, but he was also a vestryman of Pohick Church, on the Richmond and Fredericksburg highway, which he helped build. And as if that were too small a contribution, he assisted financially in building Falls Church, in the village of that name, and was an occasional worshipper there.

In a certain sense he was a narrow sectarian, for when Thomas Jefferson's bill to disestablish the Church in Virginia was before the Legislature, Father George arrayed himself, with Patrick Henry and Richard Henry Lee, against that measure. On his side also "were most of the churches and the landed gentry." While the measure was pending in the House of Delegates he wrote the celebrated George Mason, who with James Madison and George Nicholas, was pushing the bill during Jefferson's absence in France:

"Although no man's sentiments are more opposed to any kind of restraint upon religious principles than mine are, yet I confess that I am not among the number of those who are so much alarmed at the thoughts of making people pay toward the support of that which they profess." (Oct. 3, 1785).

This man who wished to tax all the people to support the churches of some of the people was broad enough to subscribe, and subscribe liberally, to the fund used to erect the Presbyterian Meeting House in Alexandria, built contrary to law, and built largely, too, from the funds of a lottery. Dissenters had no right to worship God in Virginia when that church was erected, but who or what ever stopped a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian from building his altar and raising his temple whenever and wherever he wanted to place it? When there was no worship in Christ Church—or maybe when Parson Weems was to read the service there—Washington could be found at the Presbyterian Meeting House, often in the pew of his ancient friend, John Carlyle, the banker.

Most of the lives of Washington lack much because this religious history is either not recorded, or if it is, it is not properly emphasized. When he was an infant his parents carried him to church and had him dedicated to the Lord, and at every important event in his life one finds that the hand of the Lord has reached out and touched him in some peculiar way.

Samuel Davies, the founder of the Presbyterian Church in Virginia, and one of the greatest men in our national history—Patrick Henry said of him: "He was the greatest orator I ever heard"—when Washington was but a major in the Virginia line, and had returned from Braddock's unfortunate adventure, said of him: "I feel sure that God has spared Maj. Washington for some great service to his country." Such thoughts do not just pop into one's mind. Davies had evidently been talking to God about Maj. Washington, and his eyes had been opened to the future. This is God's way of doing things, as so many books and so many men can testify.

If the historian has neglected to do justice to the spiritual impulses which moved the majestic Washington, has he not also failed to take due note of the spiritual movements that made the "Old Dominion" what she was and what she is? Aye, not of Virginia alone, but of all the States, and more particularly of the United States?

Very recently I read an able history of Maryland, written by one of the most scholarly of present-day historians. Maryland, as you know, was the cradle of Roman Catholicism, of Presbyterianism and of Methodism on this continent. From that mighty little State there went forth three of the greatest spiritual forces that have made America what she is, and my friend's history contains no word of any one of them—at least not in the sense in which I am now writing. Col. Ninian Beall, the founder of Presbyterianism on this continent—Francis Makemie was not the founder, though he is given that honor—and Francis Asbury, the great Methodist circuit rider whose bones are buried under a Methodist altar in Baltimore, are not even mentioned in this history.

Such omission is not to be wondered at. Secular historians are not always qualified to write of religious impulses, for they have no training for it. Rare indeed is the Protestant historian who can or will do justice to the Catholic Church, and vice versa; and of the Protestant sects, not even clerical historians will hue to the line of truth in uniting either of their own denomination or of others. Human nature is so warped that when our English common law was made up the sum of all wisdom, it would seem, was expended in contriving the oath "to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

I know of but one secular historian who has written with fairness and with scholarly knowledge of any religious episode in the history of a nation, and that is the late W. E. H. Lecky, whose "History of England in the Eighteenth Century" is a book of surpassing excellence. It took this rationalist to tell the truth about John Wesley and his circuit riders, for in that wonderful chapter of his history on the Methodist movement he says very frankly that the preaching of John Wesley and his lay preachers saved the civilization of England.

The historian of Virginia has taken note of certain religious movements in that State, but they have to do largely with controversial matters and with the disreputable character of certain parsons sent over by the Bishop of London in Colonial times to take charge of the parishes of the colony. Persecution of Baptists and Quakers there was, and aplenty. Dissenters, whether Presbyterians or Methodists, had no rights in Virginia that any member of the establishment was obliged to respect. And yet, despite all laws, despite all persecutions, despite all hard drinking, fox hunting, gambling parsons, the Baptists, the Quakers, the Presbyterians and the Methodists entered Virginia, entered boldly, organized their churches, built their temples and chapels, and worshiped their God by taking the Holy Communion on their knees or by taking it sitting down in their pews, by preaching extemporaneously or by reading prayers from a book.

Necessity knows no law, as this incident proves. One of the oldest churches in Virginia is a Lutheran Church, known as Hebron Church, located in Madison, right near Herbert Hoover's mountain camp. It came into existence on this wise. In 1714 Gov. Alexander Spotswood brought a colony of Germans from the fatherland to work his iron mines at Germanna, on the Rapidan. Soon they were joined by another company of Germans, who, storm tossed, were driven from their course into the Chesapeake, and the whole human cargo, we are told, was sold to pay for its passage. Not all the slavery in this country was black. Other reinforcements came later from the fatherland, and these splendid Saxons built a log church in 1726, and in 1740 built a frame church, which is now standing, and in daily use. It was the first Lutheran Church on this continent.

There was no persecution of this people. Rather they were encouraged by the civil authorities. Gov. Gooch, who was a Scottish brigadier, actually gave their pastor, John Casper Stoever, credentials when he went back to Germany to collect money with which to build this first Lutheran Church. And when Pastor Stoever came back with his 3,000 English pounds he built the church and bought glebe lands and slaves to work these lands so as to maintain the pastor.

This history is not without its significance. One century later it was the Germans of the Northwest who were the most militant foes in the country of the "peculiar institution" of the South; and yet the first church their race founded in this country became the owner of slaves and those slaves became the source of the church's income. That was not an unusual situation. It was typical of no church. John Wesley raved a lot about slavery, yet his great coworker, George Whitefield, when he founded the Methodist orphanage at Savannah, bought a company of slaves and used the product of their labor to support his orphanage.

The founding of this Lutheran Church and the founding of the Presbyterian churches in the Shenandoah Valley, two of the original of which are now standing, would indicate that the so-called persecution of the saints has been rather overemphasized. Even if there had been no established church, there would have been opposition to the coming of any new sect into Virginia or into any other community in this country. That is one of the peculiarities of this Christian religion that some of us still believe in. There never was a day in the history of the Christian era when there was as much religious persecution as is now going on, in this country and in England; mayhap in other countries.

It is a common saying that Tennessee, for instance, is the most liberal and the freest State in the Union. The evidence of this is stamped on a thousand incidents in her history. When the beautiful State Capitol at Nashville was building in the nineteenth century the stonemasons were brought down from Cincinnati to do the work. They were Irish Catholics, and they had no church in which to worship. The Protestants of Nashville raised a fund of $5,000 and the stonemasons gave their labor, and the church was erected, the first Catholic church in that State.

This was the law of necessity at work, just as it worked with the Germans in Virginia. Without a church it would have been impossible to hold those laborers, and without the laborers that capitol building would never have gone up.

This one church did not evidence an era of goodwill among religious communions. No city has been more cursed with religious strife than Nashville, beginning with the Know Nothing movement and following every other anti-Catholic movement since. And the genesis of this strife dates farther back than 1840.

When the Virginians broke through the valley of southwest Virginia about 1769, Parson

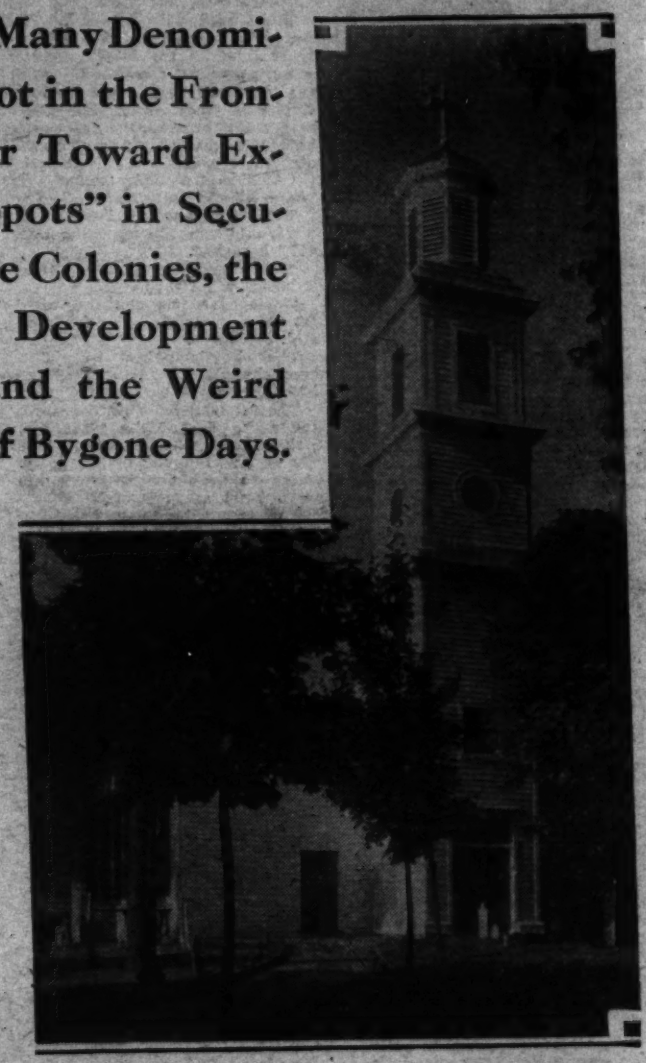
How and Why the Many Denominations Found Root in the Frontier Soil Goes Far Toward Explaining "Blind Spots" in Secular Histories of the Colonies, the Accounts of the Development of the Nation, and the Weird Political Parties of Bygone Days.



The walls of old St. John's tossed back the echo of Patrick Henry's voice when he demanded, "Liberty or death."

Samuel Doak, a Princeton graduate and a great preacher, accompanied them. They did what their ancestors had done at Jamestown: They erected an altar and then built a schoolhouse. That log church was the first one west of the Alleghanies and that schoolhouse also became the first college in that region.

Those Scotch-Irish and Huguenots were joined by Scotch and Scotch-Irish Presbyterians from North Carolina, and they planted Presbyterianism and freedom so firmly in those mountains, now east Tennessee, that neither has ever been uprooted. They made Andy Johnson possible, and they turned the tide of the Revolution at King's Mountain and won the secession war nearly a century later. But they were also the most contentious lot that ever drew the free air of their mountains. There was no true religion but that of John Calvin and John Knox, and the persecution of the Baptists and Quakers of Virginia in colonial days was pale pink in comparison with the persecution of the Methodists in Tennessee by these same Presbyterian parsons. I can write with perfect freedom, for some of my Presbyterian ancestors heated the irons for some of my Methodist forebears.

Those who know their politics know that for 40 years Tennessee was the pivotal State in our presidential battles. That made the protagonists in these battles men of might and men of daring. But none of those controversies matched in any sense the battles that took place in church, in forum and in forest between the parsons of the different faiths. It was these controversies and not his political controversies that made the celebrated Parson Brownlow the controversialist that he became. Even after he had retired from the ministry and became the editor of his Whig newspaper, the bishops and leading ministers of his church kept their hands on him and put him forward to meet the attacks of the brethren of the rival faiths.

First it was the Presbyterians who were bent on the destruction of the Methodists, and Brownlow met them in every forum. He lashed them by name in his paper, he challenged them to debate before the public, he went into their hometowns and smote them hip and thigh. He even wrote a book against them.

One of their foremost men was Dr. Frederick A. Ross, of Virginia, who though a Negro, filled some of the first Presbyterian churches of the South. That is something you hear little of, and it was not so exceptional at that. Him Brownlow took on after Dr. Ross had tried to write and preach and persecute the Methodists out of the State, and when they got through Ross had to leave the State, and go to Alabama.

But this controversy was mild by the side of that between the Baptists and the Methodists. The fair historian will tell you that the Baptists were taking Tennessee from the Presbyterians and from the more evangelical Methodists. One of their number, the Rev. Dr. J. R. Graves, edited the "Tennessee Baptist." He was a man of learning and scholarship, of undoubted ability. But he made the mistake of writing a book, which he called "The Great Iron Wheel," an attack on the Methodist church and its bishops, which even made the bishops of that communion pale. They put their case in Parson Brownlow's hands, and he examined "The Great Iron Wheel" and wrote a polemic that possibly is unsurpassed in English literature.

The dedication reads: "To every honest and impartial reader, who loves Truth and despises Falsehood, whether perpetrated by a Priest or a Levite, for the sake of Fame, or money making: To every Protesant Christian, who, to whatever sect or denomination he may be attached, is unwilling to see a sister church pulled down by a collection of tales, fabrications and blackguard insinuations, which a decent man should be ashamed to listen to, and utterly too disgraceful for a minister of the Gospel to repeat and publish, this work is confidently dedicated by its author: Who here, most respectfully, as a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, apologizes to the Christian public for the seeming severity of this work, in some parts, on the ground that he has performed the painful task of refuting a series of the most scurrilous falsehoods, and a collection of the lowest abuse of the age!"

This dedication will give the reader but a faint idea of the powers of Parson Brownlow and of the bitterness of that controversy. He referred to his antagonist as "an inflated gasometer, whose brain I believe to be a mass of living, creeping, crawling, writhing, twisting, turning, loathsome vermin." In another place he says of him: "For several years past, in portions of several States, with an unearthly din, this man has been barking, neighing, bleating, braying, mewing, puffing, swaggering, strutting; and in every situation, an offensive smell, to gentlemen of refined tastes and Christian habits, has gone out from him!"

If this is shocking to our senses in this more refined age in which we live, it was not to the audience to which it was addressed. Brownlow's book was a best seller in its day, and Methodists long attributed to it the saving of their church from destruction.

I can duplicate this episode from the history of the spread of Christianity in other States of the South. When the first Methodist minister went to New Orleans he was arrested and thrown in jail and his mission chapel nailed up by the civil authorities. And this in free America! That one incident so stirred Methodism that for half a century it sent its ablest men to that city and it established the New Orleans Christian Advocate there, a paper that sent three or more of its editors into the Episcopacy, and that for sheer ability has not had an equal in all the South as a well-edited religious paper.

All of this ancient history is retold to emphasize the fact that the parsons in Virginia were probably not so black as they have been painted. They were no worse than the parsons in England in the eighteenth century whose infidelity called forth one of the greatest of Christian polemics, Butler's "Analogy of Religion," written in 1736, and the Wesleyan Revival, which spanned the century. They were not as bad as the parsons of Prussia in that same century who were so sunk in infidelity that they would not even allow the Bible to be placed on the sacred desk. And they were not one whit worse than the men to whom they preached and who held their living in their hands.

We have contemporary evidence from an American, Philip V. Fithian, a young Princeton scholar, who was tutor in King Carter's family near the end of the eighteenth century. In his diary he writes: "I observe it is a general custom on Sundays here, with Gentlemen . . . to consult about, & determine their common business, either before or after Service. It is not the custom for Gentlemen to go into Church till Service is beginning, when they enter in a Body, in the same manner as they come out; I have known the Clerk to come out and call them in to prayers. . . . Some swear bitterly but the practise seems to be generally disapproved —I have heard that this country is notorious for Gaming, however, this be, I have not seen a Pack of Cards, nor a Die, since I left home, nor gaming or Betting of any kind except at the Richmond Race."

Charles II gave Virginia her name, "Old Dominion," because she was loyal to the crown in its controversy with the Puritans; and is to be wondered at, that hating the Puritans as she did; having an influx of unworthy characters who fled to her shores when Cromwell became the uncrowned king of England; that she should have reacted to the Restoration as did England, and that some of her parsons should have been wanting in character?

It is not in that era of repression, when Dissenters were persecuted, that we see the strong influence of the Church of England on England's greatest colony. And it was of that I set out to write, being led to an examination of this question by the recent publication of a very beautiful book, "Colonial Churches in Virginia," issued by the Dale Press, of Richmond. This is the second book to come from this young press, and it is a more important work than the first one, "Virginia in Wood Blocks." The text was written by a son of Virginia, Henry Irving Brock, with an introduction by the noted historian, Hamilton James Eckenrode. The illustrations in aquatint are from photographs made by Frances Benjamin Johnston.

Some of these old churches have never before been photographed or sketched, and except in Bishop Meade's noted history of the diocese, they have not hitherto been described. Mr. Brock and Miss Johnston, therefore, have made what might be called a brand new book, a distinct contribution to one of the most important spiritual movements in our history. And why should the recovery from the dust of past centuries of a beautiful story like this not be called a spiritual movement? If you were to take from civilization the contribution that Orthodox Christianity has made to architecture, to art, to poetry, to literature, to song, to music, to oratory, to humanity, to philanthropy, to freedom, there would be nothing left. Reflect a moment on this and see what Christianity has done for the world, and for all of its enemies, too. And yet today, more than on that dark Friday when He was nailed to the tree, the Christ has more enemies than he ever had. Those who should revere his name most hate him most. It is a sad situation.

It is in the colonial churches, that have been preserved and are still in use by those who built them, that we find the story of the early church in Virginia. No hard drinking, fox hunting, card playing parsons built those beautiful temples, which Mr. Brock has described with such tenderness and moving eloquence and which Miss Johnston has preserved in photography which is no less poetic.

They were all set at the crossroads, and most of them were built for time and eternity. Their lines are typical of ecclesiastical architecture of that day. One of them actually dates back to 1632, a century before George Washington was born. This is St. Luke's in Isle of Wight County. The latest are Christ Church, Pohick and Falls Church, and the Presbyterian Meeting House, which just do antedate the Declaration of Independence.

As one muses over the pictures of these ancient temples a glorious civilization rises in his mind, a civilization which produced the greatest race of great men that ever blessed any nation. Not even Greece in her glory produced men

The church activities of the Father of His Country were not confined to Christ Church alone, for he helped build Falls Church.

THE FLY CATCHER - - - By LUCIAN CARY

ONE afternoon in August several years ago, before they abolished swinging doors, a short, fat, shabby man walked west in Forty-second street on his way to work.

The newsdealer at the corner of Seventh avenue saw the fat man coming and spoke with a certain deference.

"Hello, Billy," he said.

"Hello, Al," the fat man said, and smiled a particularly genial smile.

On the other side of the street a tall policeman nodded and said "Hello, Billy," with the same air of deference—the deference that the nicer sort of young people pay to the once great. The fat man smiled at the policeman and said "Hello, Al," and the policeman, Joseph John O'Brien, smiled back.

Beyond Ninth avenue that fat man turned through a pair of swinging doors. The place was cool and empty, and only one bartender was on duty.

"Hello, Al," the fat man said.

"Hello, Billy," the bartender said. Without waiting for an order he drew a glass of dark beer, scraped the foam off the top and set it on the bar.

The fat man smiled and put one foot on the brass rail and leaned one elbow comfortably on the bar. The bartender returned to his task of polishing glasses.

"Well," he said, holding a glass up to the light, "how's the boy?"

"I'm getting old, Al," the fat man said. "I ain't what I once was."

"You got something left," the bartender assured him.

"Yes," the fat man admitted, "got something left." He sipped his beer sadly, remembering the high estate from which he had fallen.

The bartender set a couple of empty glasses on the bar. The fat man turned them bottom up and looked up inquiringly at the ceiling. The chandelier above his head was festooned with an elaborate design in colored tissue paper. The paper fluttered gently in the breeze from a pair of slow-moving old-fashioned wooden fans like airplane propellers. The fluttering paper was intended to discourage the flies. So was the mosquito netting that covered the mirror behind the bar.

"Do you mind stirrin' em' up a little, Al?" the fat man asked.

The bartender took a feather duster and went forward to the window. He shook the duster back and forth in the window, disturbing the flies that had congregated there.

One was swooping past the fat man's face when he reached out with an incredibly quick movement and caught it between his thumb and finger. He held the fly delicately so as not to injure it and thrust it under one of the upturned glasses on the bar, where it buzzed angrily.

A dozen times the fat man reached out with that plump hand of his and a dozen times he caught a fly on the wing and tucked him away under one of the glasses on the bar.

"Got enough?" the bartender asked.

"Aye," the fat man said. His speech was not quite that of New York. It had traces of England in it.

Customers began to drift in. The bartender was soon busy setting out foaming glasses of beer and dropping wet nickels into the cash register.

A Negro waiter staggered in with an enormous roast of beef. One after another they went down to the Negro's counter, picked up a slice of bread and held it out. The Negro laid a thin slice of the red hot meat on each man's piece of bread. Then the man turned back to the bar, his mouth full, and ordered another glass of beer.

The fat man was listening. Several times he heard one man say to another, "That's him—down there at the end of the bar." When the fat man had finished the last bite of bread and cheese he brushed the crumbs off himself. He could feel the crowd watching him. He turned sidewise to the bar, and with his left hand on one of the glasses in which he had imprisoned flies, and smiled at the crowd. Several of them edged nearer. He heard a young man in overalls say to another, "Now he's going to do it—watch him."

The fat man waited, enjoying the moment.

When he saw that he had their attention—that they were all standing in a circle watching him—the fat man looked down at the glass he held. He raised the rim slightly until a fly escaped. The fly walked out on the bar, suddenly realized its freedom and took wing, swooping away faster than the ordinary eye could follow. But with that incredibly swift movement of his the fat man picked the sweeping fly out of the air and returned it to the glass.

"Aw," said a young steamfitter, "them flies are all cripples."

The fat man smiled happily.

"Would you like to catch one, Al?" he asked.

The crowd urged the young steamfitter forward.

"Whenever you say the word I'll let a fly loose," the fat man said.

The skeptic poised his hand near the glass. "All right," he said.

The fat man let a fly out from under the rim of the glass. It took wing almost instantly. The steamfitter lunged ineffectually, trying to grab the fly with his whole hand, and missing it.

The crowd laughed.

The fat man held up his hand and delicately tapped the end of his thumb with the end of his forefinger.

"The idea is to pick up the fly out of the air—like this," he said. He released a fly, and as it flew he picked it out of the air and held it up for the steamfitter to see. "Want to try again, Al?" he asked.

The steamfitter shook his head.

"No," he said, and grinned. "I guess the next round is on me." He laid two silver dollars on the bar and motioned to the bartender to serve more beer.

Out of the corner of his eye the fat man had noticed a boy of 18 or 19 slip through the swinging door and skirt the crowd. The fat man turned on the boy suddenly.

"Want to catch a fly, Al?" he said to the boy.

The boy flushed, but nodded. He was a lean, wiry youngster with a snub nose and freckles.

"Say when," the fat man ordered. The boy poised his hand, his thumb and forefinger extended. "Ready," he said.

The fat man released a fly. It did not take wing at once. The fat man blew on the fly and flushed it. The boy reached out with a movement as incredibly quick as the fat man's own and caught the fly between his thumb and finger.

The crowd yelled. The fat man endeavored to smile his genial smile. But his world was slipping—unless the boy's catch was an accident. "Try it again," he suggested. The boy nodded. Again the fat man released a fly and again the boy pinched it out of the air. "Again," the fat man said. And a third time the boy caught the fly as it swooped away.

The fat man took a long, sighing breath, studying the boy.

"Let's see how quick you are," he said grimly. The fat man took off his coat and laid it on the bar. He slipped his braces over his shoulders and tied them around his waist for a belt. He stepped back from the bar and laid his bandanna on the floor. "Now, Al," he continued, "I'm going to stand on the handkerchief for a minute by the watch. I won't move off the handkerchief and I won't hit, and I won't guard. See if you can hit my head."

The fat man bent his knees slightly, bent his body a little forward, and threw his weight on his toes.

"C'mon," he said to the boy.

The boy flushed and hesitated.

"Try it, kid," yelled a man at the back of the circle. The bartender spoke close to the boy's ear: "Go on, kid; see if you can hit his head."

The fat man began to weave his body, without moving his feet. His head swayed from side to side in an irregular, broken movement.

"C'mon, Al," he said to the boy.

Still the boy hung back. A young tough pushed forward. "Let me try," he said. The fat man recognized the type. He was a gangster from the tough district to the south and west. The fat man nodded.

The young tough went into a crouch and came in with both hands moving. He had the air of a professional prize fighter. "Been fighting in preliminary bouts," the fat man said to himself. By some intuition he knew what the young tough was going to do. Suddenly the young tough shot both fists forward simultaneously. In the same instant the fat man paused in weaving his head back and forth. One fist went by his left ear and the other fist went by his right ear, and the young tough, carried forward by the force of his lunge, fell against the fat man.

The crowd roared its delight.

The tough, recovering himself, rained blows at the fat man's head. The fat man bobbed his head. Every time it bobbed a flying fist missed it. The young tough was breathing in deep gasps when time was called. But he had not so much as grazed the fat man's cheek.

Somebody pushed the boy forward.

"C'mon, Al," he said to the boy. "You try it."

The boy reluctantly put up his hands. He did not crouch. He stood up almost straight, with his left well advanced and his right across his middle, in the classic fashion. The fat man knew what he was going to do.

The boy shot his left forward, clean and sharp, and brought his right over just as the fat man had known he would. But the fat man, knowing, didn't duck into the right. He ducked the other way.

The boy was not disconcerted by his miss. He went coolly to work, throwing one-two punches at the fat man's head. The boy was fast. He didn't know much about hitting. But he had that incredible quickness the fat man had never found before in any one he had ever faced. The fat man knew that he was going to lose. He was going inevitably to duck into one of those punches. They came too fast. He couldn't anticipate them fast enough. He couldn't keep it up. He was through. And then suddenly he knew that the kid wasn't going to hit him. He could, but he wouldn't. The next moment time was called, and the boy stepped back and dropped his hands.

The fat man puffed a little as he untied his braces and slipped them over his shoulders. He put on his coat and hat. Then he turned to the boy.

"Hungry?" he asked.

The boy nodded.

"You come with me, Al," the fat man said. He led the way around the corner to Dinty McGuire's and ordered steak and onions and a dish of sliced tomatoes and fried potatoes and coffee. When they had eaten everything the waiter had brought, the fat man lighted his pipe.

"Al," he said, "why didn't you hit me?"

"I don't know," the boy said.

"Do you know who I am?" the fat man asked.

The boy looked up and smiled. "I read all about you in a Sunday paper," he said. "You're Smiling Billy Smith. Only three men ever beat you, and you fought them all. You weighed 120, and you fought them all—even welterweights and middleweights. You fought them all and none of them ever knocked you off your feet.

Smiling Billy went out and had lunch with the girl and the boy, and he knew the boy meant what he said.

You're the greatest boxer there ever was. You went twenty rounds with Joe Gans."

"Gans got the decision," the fat man reminded him.

"Yes—Gans got the decision. He outweighed you twelve pounds and he was the champion and he got the decision."

The fat man smiled, thinking wistfully of the old, great days when he had made them all flounder—even the grave, deadly Gans.

"Now," he said to the boy, "I get $2 for drawing customers into a saloon—catching flies."

"The paper told about that, too," the boy said. "It told about how you were so quick you could catch flies on the wing. And I tried it, and after a while I could do it too."

"You're the only one I ever saw that could," the fat man said. "I've been doing it for 30 years, and you're the only one I ever saw that could do it besides me."

He looked at the boy thoughtfully. He hesitated. He had dreamed many times of finding a boy like that and teaching him to box—of living again the old, great days.

"Ever do any fighting?" he asked.

"Some," the boy said.

"Al," the fat man said, "you don't know what it means. You don't know how much you got to learn. You don't know how monotonous it is—training and learning. You're just a kid."

"I'm 20 years old," the boy said, "and I've got to have $5,000 cash to get that farm and—that's all there is to it."

"Why a farm?" the fat man asked. "What do you want with a farm?"

"I'm a farmer," the boy answered. "And that farm has always been in my family."

The fat man smiled. "You're sure there isn't a girl in it?"

"What if there is?" the boy asked.

The fat man shook his head. "Fighting and women don't mix," he said.

The boy shook his head impatiently. "I'm going to marry this girl and be a farmer, but I got to have $5,000 first."

The fat man paid the check and gave the waiter a quarter, which left him with a nickel to jingle against two pennies in his pocket.

"I've got to go back to the saloon now," he said, "and catch some more flies. But you're on. You're on and we'll go fifty-fifty. I've got a room in a basement down the street. Half of it is yours. It doesn't cost me anything. I did a woman a favor once, and now she gives me a room."

That was the way the fat man found the boy who made himself known the following winter to astonished fight reporters and to astonished preliminary boys as Farmer Joe Hawley.

Joe could box. The reporters loved to see him work, and the preliminary boys hated him because they could not hit him. The crowds at places like the Pioneer Athletic Club razzed him because he did not hit harder. But he got one decision after another.

Smiling Billy Smith walked the streets of New York with a new swing. He had lost 30 pounds of his superfluous fat in teaching the boy to box and ten years of his age. He was looking forward to the new, great days when Farmer Joe would give the champion a boxing lesson and the fight reporters would say that there never had been such a boxer in the world — except Smiling Billy Smith.

Smiling Billy had only one worry: He had to hold the boy down. He had to tell him after every round to stay away and use his straight left and never take a solid punch and never try for a knockout. The boy was too eager and he didn't know that he couldn't hit.

They had their first disagreement about a match with Sailor Rourke. Smiling Billy thought it was too soon.

"You need another year, Al," he explained gently.

The boy shook his head impatiently.

"It means $7,000 or $8,000," he said. "And with my share of that and what I got now I can buy that farm."

In the end Smiling Billy gave in and they made the match for Labor Day at the ball park.

Smiling Billy collected sparring partners. He got two of the fastest featherweights he could find. Speed was what his boy had. Smiling Billy didn't intend he should rough it with the Sailor.

A week before the day of the fight Smiling Billy was almost satisfied. He didn't know he was worried until he lost his temper with the boy about the girl. Three days before the fight the girl came down from up-State. The boy insisted on taking her out to lunch. Smiling Billy almost locked the boy up in his quarters.

The next day the boy announced he was going out to lunch with the girl again.

"No, Al," he said to the boy. "Once is enough. You got to be thinking about this fight."

"I'm sorry, Bill," the boy said, "but she's never been in New York before, and she can only stay a few days, and I've got to show her around."

The boy went to lunch with the girl. He went that day, and he went the next. He didn't get back from lunch until a quarter to three, and he had just time to get down to the weighing in. Smiling Billy was sick about it.

"Come out of it," the boy said when they had got into a taxicab afterward. "I made the weight didn't I?"

"You made the weight," the fat man admitted.

"Are you still worrying about that girl?" the boy demanded.

"Why wouldn't I be?" Smiling Billy asked.

He felt a little better after the first two rounds of the fight. The boy was doing exactly what he had been told to do. He was left-jabbing the Sailor silly. The Sailor would come charging in, both hands going, willing to take two punches if he could only deliver one. The boy's left would shoot out and snap his head back. The Sailor would pause and shake his head and then, lowering it, he would charge again. And again the boy's left would shoot out—shoot out with the same incredible swiftness of movement with which he would catch a fly on the wing—and snap the Sailor's head back. The Sailor, maddened, would charge like a wild animal, carrying the boy across the ring and swinging with both hands, and the boy would coolly duck and block, taking the blows on his shoulders or on his elbows, when he could not let them go by.

It went on that way for three rounds, four rounds, five rounds—until the Sailor's face was a crimson splash and the crowd yelled for him to kill the boy.

"You've got him," Smiling Billy crooned in the boy's ear between rounds. "You've got him. He can't hit you. Stay away from him until his knees begin to wobble. Stay away from him and you get the decision. Stay away, Al. Stay away."

After the tenth round Sailor slowed appreciably. He began to clinch. He would clinch and rough the boy, rubbing his heavy unshaven chin in the boy's eyes, pushing his nose up in the breakaway and talking.

Smiling Billy could hear some of the things the Sailor growled in the boy's ear. Quite unpleasant things. He began to razz the boy about the girl. He was trying to get the boy angry.

After the twelfth round the boy was tense. "You aren't letting him get your goat, are you Al?" Smiling Billy asked.

The boy nodded. He muttered an oath. Smiling Billy soothed him as if he had been a child. "Don't mind what he says, Al. He's only talking because he can't hit you. Don't let him talk you into letting him hit you. Stay away, Al."

After the fourteenth round the boy was crazy to go and knock the Sailor out. "Stay away. Stay away for one more round. Stay away and he's yours."

The boy went in for the last round and stayed away. Smiling Billy could see the way the boy felt. He could see the boy wince when the Sailor snarled something in his ear about the girl. But the boy stayed away. And as the bell rang the referee grabbed the boy's arm and held it up to announce to the crowd that he was the winner. The crowd booed, as always, to see a rushing hooker beaten by a boxer. Smiling Billy started across the ring with a bathrobe in his hands. He tripped over the bathrobe and looked down to get it out of the way of his feet, and as he tripped, he heard the Sailor roar, "You cream-puff puncher, I'll show you."

The Sailor caught the boy with his hands down. He caught the boy on the jaw with a right hook and sent him crashing down. Smiling Billy turned to pick the boy up. But the boy was already scrambling to his feet. He scrambled to his feet and rushed the Sailor as the Sailor had rushed him. Smiling Billy saw the Sailor's right cocked and opened his mouth to yell, "Look out." The boy's straight left flashed out, and as the Sailor ducked he ducked into a crashing right that sent him down and out.

The next instant Smiling Billy had the boy in his bathrobe. "Al," he said, "if I'd known you could hit like that I'd have let you take him—I'd have let you take him."

The next day the boxing commission disqualified the Sailor and the boy—set them down for six months. Smiling Billy went into the boy's room at the hotel. The boy was busy dressing.

"Al," he said, "you can't fight again for six months. You shouldn't have let him get your goat. You shouldn't have lost your head."

"Billy," the boy said, "I don't give a whoop about being set down. I'm through with this game. I'm through fighting. I'm going to get married and go back up-State and buy that farm."

"Al," Smiling Billy said, "you don't know—you don't know."

"I don't know what?" the boy snapped.

"You could take the champion with that punch. With a punch like that you could take anybody. You don't know it, but the Sailor was out for eleven minutes after you hit him."

The boy shook his head.

"I'm going to get married, and go up-State and buy that farm," the boy said. "And if you want to come along, we'll be glad to have you. Come on with us, Billy."

"You really mean it?" Smiling Billy asked. "Do you really mean you're through?"

"Billy," the boy said, "I'm through. I'm through with the game. But I'm not through with you. I'm going out to lunch with the girl. Come on meet her. Come on to see us get married and go up-State with us and settle down."

Smiling Billy went out and had lunch with the girl and the boy and he knew the boy meant what he had said. But Smiling Billy wouldn't go up-State. He saw them off on the train. He saw them off at the Grand Central and then he walked slowly west to Forty-second street.

At the corner of Seventh avenue the newsdealer spoke to him with a certain deference. On the other side of the street a tall policeman nodded and said, "Hello, Billy," with the same air of deference—the deference that the nice sort of young people pay to the once great.

Beyond Ninth avenue the fat man turned through a pair of swinging doors. The place was cool and empty, and only one bartender was on duty.

"Hello, Al," Smiling Billy said.

"Hello, Billy," the bartender said. Without waiting for an order he drew a glass of dark beer, scraped the foam off the top, and set it on the bar.

A fly swooped past Smiling Billy's face. He wondered if he could still do it. He hadn't caught a fly for more than a year. He hadn't thought of catching flies. But now he waited, watching. He waited until a fly came swooping down the bar, and then he tried. With an incredibly quick movement he reached out and caught the fly between his thumb and finger.

"Al," he said to the bartender, "I can still do it." He held up the fly. "I ain't what I was once, but I got something left."

"Yes," the bartender agreed, "you got something left."

"Al," Smiling Billy said, "Al, do you suppose the boss would give me my old job back?"

"Sure," the bartender said. "Sure."

The fat man smiled and put one foot on the brass rail and leaned one elbow comfortably on the bar. He sipped his beer sadly, remembering the high estate from which he had fallen. But the bartender set out a couple of glasses and went forward to the window with the feather duster and dislodged the flies that had congregated there.

who could match Washington, Jefferson, George Mason, Patrick Henry, James Madison, the Lees, the Marshalls, the Harrisons, the Randolphs, George Wythe, and those of lesser magnitude, William McKendree and Enoch George, Methodist bishops; Sam Houston, the empire builder, and Ephriam McDowell, America's greatest surgeon; George Rogers Clark and Meriwether Lewis, explorers of a continent. If you were to take Virginia blood out of the South and out of the Nation, how poor the stream would be!

But none of these, I wot, deserves more of Virginia than her great Episcopal circuit rider, William Meade, who came to manhood while Jefferson was President, who found the Episcopal church dead almost beyond resurrection—Chief Justice John Marshall gave him a subscription but told him it was useless to attempt to revive so dead a thing as the Episcopal Church—and who, when he died, in 1862, had revived the church and made it one of the vital spiritual forces in the country.

"He went to and fro on horseback, an itinerant apostle preaching the faith . . . At his call the old worshippers came back to the ruined places, and the dismantled churches, half overgrown with brambles and ivy, were once more thronged . . . What the church had lost was the impure blood, and it rose purified and invigorated. The great and good man who had cried to it, 'Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead!' gave his own impress to it from that time forward. It had once been intolerant and many of its ministers had not been exemplary people; in the future it was to be the most tolerant of all communions, and its clergy were to be models of piety and self-sacrifice.

"That is the character of the church today. It is so liberal in spirit that in certain other dioceses it is scarcely recognized as an 'Episcopal Church' at all. No criticism could be more welcome. It is to say that the Episcopal Church of Virginia is not cursed by a spirit of narrow sectarianism—is evangelical."

So wrote a secular historian, whose "Surrey of the Eagle's Nest," "Mohun" and other Virginia novels which I read in my boyhood caused me to love the State that gave a harbor to my ancestors when they fled from France in 1689 and settled at Mannakin Town above Richmond.

Bishop Meade was educated at Princeton, and so got the impress of Presbyterian on him; he adopted the methods of John Wesley's people, and became something of a Methodist; and the best of both polities he grafted on to the Virginia Church which he salvaged and saved and resurrected. He, too, deserves to live on in the memory of man.

And he does. Some years ago when Bishop Brown was turning things upside down in Arkansas, which was his diocese, the Episcopal Church there got rid of him, and he was later unfrocked by his church. In selecting his successor some of the most prominent men in Arkansas came to Memphis to hear a Virginia Episcopalian, Dr. James R. Winchester, preach. It so happened that I knew some of them, and being something of an ecclesiastical tramp as well as a newspaper reporter, they visited me to find out if I thought Dr. Winchester was bishop timber. I had known the doctor for years in Nashville and loved him much. To their inquiries I said:

"If you want a bishop who has the gentleness and the courtesy of Gen. Lee, the sublime faith of St. Paul and the sweetness and mysticism of St. John, you will find him in Dr. Winchester. He is the nearest thing to a Methodist saint I ever saw with his collar buttoned behind."

Not on my recommendation but on his worthiness they elected him and he has done in Arkansas what Bishop Meade did in Virginia. I suspect that sometimes when he feels lonesome Bishop Winchester steals off and preaches for the colored people, just to hear them shout. Bishop Meade often refreshed his soul thus.

A REPUBLIC OF TODDLERS

custard—some even had seconds—but no one gave Goldilocks any. She hurried with her luncheon plate then, but the gong sounded, the containers of dessert were whisked away from the serving tables, and Goldilocks saw the goodies disappear. Next time she will be on time, without fail.

The children are not asked to perform tasks beyond their powers. The quick hand of an attendant is ready to aid where help is really needed.

"That," remarked a tot to his neighbor, watching a newcomer carrying out the home system of crying for a toy with which another child was playing, "will not do her any good." The youngster was right. There was no scurrying about or petting of the little weeper; children and adults alike went on with their own pursuits while the welkin rang with her howls. Gradually the howls became sobs, then they ceased altogether and she walked over, selected another toy, and started playing happily with it. Child experts operate on the well-established theory that emotional disturbances, such as temper and tantrums and irritability, are not so much the result of inherent nervous weaknesses as the methods children adopt in attaining their desires.

Each child is permitted to select his own toy from the toy-house in the play yard. Their selection is noted down by the careful watchers. They work out their own methods of play, the children. Invariably it is said the little girl or group of girls who play with a handsome doll's bed place it in the corner of an improvised crate or under a tree as the central motif in a make-believe home. The sliding boards for sliding usually are put to that purpose, although the children show a selective trait in picking out the ones most suitable for their height and weight. A large blackboard and crayons are in one corner of the yard ready for the child anxious to exercise an urge for self-expression by line or color. Yet the board is seldom used.

Some of the toys and equipment have a double purpose, being not only for healthful play but are corrective in character. Posture boards, for instance, to regulate manner of carrying young shoulders and forms and to give a real sense of balance are considered lots of fun and are popular with the children. The flat-footed child swings and sways on the swing made of two ropes and a log and record is kept as to the corrective and preventive effects of this device.

The center also directs the sleep, personal habits, cleanliness and hygiene of the children. The children come indoors after out-of-doors play for a rest period before luncheon. This rest is taken on a soft mat of sacking dyed in pretty colors. These are spread on the floor and the children lie on them.

After luncheon comes another rest period and a nap. While the little ones sleep the experts studied the relation between the food intake and the afternoon sleep. The character and duration of the sleep are mechanically recorded. Before they were tucked away for their naps, the children wash their own hands, faces and feet—if they have been barefoot—brush and comb their hair and put away their equipment. Night clothes are then put on. After two or three hours sleep they are required to know where their clothes are and to dress themselves neatly and quickly.

At 4 p. m. happy, contented and gay as larks they go to their homes. Parents of children in the nursery school attend seminars to hear discussions of common problems. Between 40 and 50 per cent of the attendance is that of fathers. Changing attitudes of parents show the benefits of this parent education program and it aids the center workers as well. Study courses for mothers are also held at the center.

UNCLE SAM and the HOME-MAKER

THE place taken by the Post-office Department in the daily lives of the people is still another evidence of the paternal interest of the Government in the welfare of the citizens of the country. Since the earliest days of post riders this service has been developed and improved in step with the progress of the times until today it ranks high in the annals of similar institutions throughout the world.

Few persons realize that more than 1,500,000 letters are mailed somewhere in the U. S. A. during each hour of a given day and that does not take into account the tremendous volume of parcels post packages flowing through our post-offices either. Today fleet airships and airplanes pursue their steady way undisturbed by storm or turmoil in the skies on their beneficent mission of delivering air mail quickly and with as little delay as possible from coast to coast. These unsung mail carriers of the air would have been hailed as heroes in another generation less accustomed to the miraculous in our every day life.

Lindbergh is not the first notable whose name has adorned the rolls of the United States mail service. On this golden scroll are to be seen such illustrious cognomens as Benjamin Franklin and Abraham Lincoln, both of whom were official members of the U. S. Postal Service in its earlier days.

It is due to Lincoln that the money order system was established as a part of the United States Postal Service. Billions of dollars are now handled safely and cheaply through this means. Foreigners particularly take great comfort in this method of sending money to their homes in other lands and in the transfer of money from one city to another in this country. They regard Uncle Sam as the most trustworthy banker of all, as he is. There is never a run on his bank. Postal savings because of this feeling on the part of the foreign-born and many others of our people have grown to enormous proportions in the last years. They average as much as $150,000,000 annually.

The interest is small, but the deposits are safe. Other features of the U. S. Postal Service of direct benefit to the American homemaker are the parcels post and the rural free delivery. Through these means cheaper produce is brought fresh and edible to the front door of the city dwellers and the rural housewife is kept in touch with the homemaking developments of the cities. Thousands of dozens of fresh eggs, untold pounds of butter and fresh vegetables and fruits galore are thus brought in good condition to the city homes from the farms with mutual benefit to the shippers and the consumers.

The growth of interest in the Uncle Sam and the Homemakers' Page in The Washington Sunday Post since it started a little more than a year ago has been remarkable. In addition to these weekly hints, recipes and novel ideas in homemaking garnered from the various Government departments of Washington The Sunday Post is ready to furnish any possible further information about items printed on this page from week to week.

Protecting baby's eyes from infection and below is a youngster who smilingly proclaims the benefits of similar and other care provided through the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor.

Play Suits for Winter.

(Bureau of Home Economics.)

Children's clothing must be comfortable. All their garments, especially play suits, should permit freedom and natural movement of the body. Now that outside exercise is being emphasized more and more, clothes which will keep the youngster warm on a cold day and still allow freedom in play are in great demand. The weight of these garments must be as light as possible, because too heavy clothing does not encourage play and may cause posture defects. The choice of a fabric is very important in determining the actual weight of the garment, but the selection of a design which will allow free movement and an even distribution of weight is equally necessary.

Selection of Play-Suit Fabrics.

The warmth of a fabric depends on weave and finish quite as much as on weight. The most desirable fabrics are warm, light in weight, soft, pliable, moisture-proof and closely woven or knitted. Few materials completely meet all these requirements, but there are many that measure up in a satisfactory way. A soft, closely woven, fuzzy cloth may be much warmer than a harsh, smooth, leathery fabric. Knitted materials and sweater suits are elastic and fit snugly, but are less warm than woven ones because the stitches are far apart and the wind can blow through.

For many years wool fabrics were considered the only ones that would really hold in heat. Recently, however, cotton materials that compare favorably with the wools are appearing on the market. Although they may not replace wool entirely, in some cases they may be used to advantgae.

When children play out of doors they must be kept dry. Cloth may be woven so tightly that it sheds moisture, or it may be treated so that it will turn off water and slushy snow.

Children love bright colors, and their delight in them can be used to advantage when selecting outside garments. Motorists often fail to see children as they dart unexpectedly across the street because the usual colors for their outside wraps, such as gray, tan, brown, navy blue and black, blend in with the background; whereas, bright blue or green, red and orange would provide a "safety zone" around the youngster.

One-Piece Suits Are Practical.

In these days when the self-help idea is being stressed in childen's clothing, the one-piec play suit is in greater favor than the older two-piece style. Even the well-designed two-piece knitted suit would present some difficulty to the 3-year-old if she tried to adjust it entirely by herself. The leggings have a back and front not always easily recognized by the small child and the slip-over sweater is hard to pull on so that the right arm gets into the right sleeve and not out through the neck. Also since the child's abdomen must be kept warm, the garments must overlap or stay together at the waistline. As the child exercises, each part is inclined to slip apart and allow cold air, snow, or rain to reach the body. Knitted, elastic, or fabric bands and draw strings are the usual methods of holding the blouse and leggings in place but they are more or less unsatisfactory when the child romps and climbs. Of these, the knitted band is the most desirable because it provides warmth, is nonrestricting, and goes back into place after stretching.

Children dressed comfortably for early morning play on chilly days often become much too warm long before noon as the temperature rises and they are more active. A combination of garments was designed with this in mind. The inner suit is made from a lightweight wool material. A smoothly finished cotton fabric was selected for the outer suit. This collects dirt less readily and is more easily cleaned than the wool cloth. It may or may not be shower proof. Either of these suits may be worn alone but when worn together they furnish the necessary warmth for low temperatures. By varying the types of fabrics used, this combination will provide comfort for active children in most kinds of weather and climate.

Care of Milk in Home.

(Bureau of Dairy Industry.)

No matter how well milk has been handled up to the time it is delivered to the consumer, it can not be expected to keep well if it is then carelessly treated. Milk should be kept clean, covered and cool; these three points consumer as well as producer should never disregard.

The best way of buying milk is in bottles. In this form it can be kept clean and cool more easily during delivery and is much more convenient to handle. Dipping milk from large cans and pouring it into customers' receptacles on the street exposes it to dusty air and is bad practice. Drawing milk from the faucet of a retailer's can is not quite so bad as dipping, but the milk is not kept thoroughly mixed and some consumers will receive less than their share of cream. By whichever of these methods the milk is measured, it should be delivered personally to some member of the household, if possible, or a covered vessel may be set out, such as a bowl covered with a plate, or better still, a glass jar, used for no other purpose, with a glass lid but without a rubber ring. Under no circumstances should an uncovered vessel be set out to collect thousands of bacteria from street dust before the milk is poured into it. Money and paper tickets are generally more or less soiled; hence neither should be put into the milk receptacle.

Sometimes milk delivered as early as 4 a. m. remains out-of-doors in a place exposed to sunshine and perhaps accessible to cats and dogs until 9 or 10 o'clock. This is wrong. If the milk can not conveniently be brought into the house at once the delivery man should be asked to leave it in a sheltered place or in a covered box provided for the purpose. Even a temporary rise in the temperature of milk will help the development of bacteria that have been held in check by keeping the milk cool.

As soon as possible after delivery, milk should be put in a cool, clean place and kept there until used. Exposure to the air of pantry, kitchen or nursery is harmful. Unless it is in the bottle into which it was put in the dairy, the milk should be poured into a freshly scalded vessel and covered.

The best temperature for keeping milk is 50 degrees Fahrenheit or less, and good milk kept as cool as that should remain sweet for 12 hours at least and ordinarily 24 hours or more, after it reaches the consumer. If ice can not be obtained, an ice-less refrigerator or some such device is a help, even though the temperature is as low as 50 degrees Fahrenheit can rarely be maintained in it.

In the ordinary refrigerator, unless the milk container is in actual contact with the ice, the milk will be colder at the bottom of the refrigerator than in the ice compartment, for cold air settles rapidly. The refrigerator should be kept clean and sweet at all times. It is a good plan to inspect it thoroughly at least once a week to see that the outlet for water from the melting ice is open and that the space under the ice rack is clean. Also, the food compartments should be washed often with water to which washing soda has been added, for particles of food dropped in the refrigerator are likely to spoil and to contaminate other foods.

Timely Tested Recipes from The Bureau of Home Economics

Department of Agriculture.

Bread and Muffins.

Honey is not often used in breadmaking, but there is no reason why it may not be used in yeast bread as food for the yeast plant or be substituted for molasses or sugar in varieties of bread which call for such sweetening. A few recipes are here given.

Bran Brown Bread.

1 cup white or whole wheat flour
1 teaspoon soda
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup bran
⅓ cup honey
1 cup sour milk
½ cup raisins floured

Sift together the flour, soda and salt, and add the other ingredients. Steam 3 hours or bake 40 minutes in a slow oven. If the amount of milk is increased by half, the bread is more delicate and has a somewhat higher food value.

Steamed Brown Bread.

1 cup yellow corn meal
2 cups graham flour
2-3 cup honey
2 cups sour milk
1 teaspoon salt
1½ teaspoons soda
1 tablespoon boiling water
1 cup raisins

Mix together the meal, flour and salt; add the sour milk and the honey and then the soda dissolved in the boiling water; and the raisins. Steam 3 hours in covered receptacles, which should be not more than two-thirds full at the beginning of the cooking.

Spanish or Creole Sauce.

2 cups canned tomatoes.
2 tablespoons chopped onion.
1 chopped green pepper or canned pimiento.
½ cup chopped celery.
2 tablespoons butter.
2 teaspoons minced parsley.
4 tablespoons minced ham or bacon.
1 bay leaf.
1 tablespoon flour.
Salt and pepper to taste.

Add the onion to the butter and cook it until it is tender and yellow. Add all the other ingredients except the minced ham or bacon and the flour, and simmer for half an hour. Remove the bay leaf. Blend the flour with a little melted butter and add to the sauce. Cook for 5 or 10 minutes longer, add the ham or bacon, and serve at once.

Savory Tomato Sauce.

2 cups canned tomatoes.
4 tablespoons butter.
½ cup grated carrot.
2 tablespoons minced onion.
4 tablespoons flour.
½ bay leaf.
¼ teaspoon mustard.
¼ teaspoon summer savory.
¾ teaspoon salt.
⅛ teaspoon pepper.
1 cup water.

Cook vegetables and seasoning in the fat for two minutes, being careful not to brown the vegetables. Add flour after 1 minute so that it mixes in with the fat. Add tomato juice, salt and water and heat until the mixture thickens. Place over hot water for 10 minutes. Strain and serve.

Plain Tomato Sauce.

2 cups canned tomatoes.
1 bay leaf.
½ to ¾ teaspoon salt.
2 allspice.
1 teaspoon sugar.
2 slices onion.
2 cloves.
⅛ teaspoon pepper.

Cook the ingredients for ten minutes. Strain through a fine sieve. Measure the liquid. For each cup of liquid allow two tablespoons flour and two tablespoons butter. Melt the butter, add the flour, and when they are thoroughly blended add the seasoned tomato juice and stir until thickened. Place over hot water for 5 or 10 minutes. Serve hot with croquettes or meat loaf.

Baked Cheese and Macaroni.

2 cups macaroni or spaghetti broken in small pieces.
4 tablespoons flour.
4 tablespoons butter.
2 cups milk.
¾ pound American cheese.
1 teaspoon salt.

Cook the macaroni or spaghetti in two quarts of boiling salted water until tender. Drain in a strainer and pour cold water over it to prevent the pieces from sticking together. Make a sauce with the flour, butter, milk and salt. Grate or cut the cheese into the sauce, reserving a little to grate over the top of the dish.

Place the macaroni in a buttered baking dish in alternate layers with the cheese sauce. Scatter the extra grated cheese over the top with buttered bread crumbs. Bake until the sauce and macaroni are hot through and the crumbs are brown.

Cheese Toast.

1 pound American cheese.
1 cup rich milk or cream.
2 eggs.
4 drops tabasco, or a few grains of cayenne pepper.
2 tablespoons flour mixed with 2 tablespoons water.
A little onion juice, if desired.
½ teaspoon salt.
1½ teaspoons baking powder.

Shave the cheese into thin small pieces. Heat the milk in a double boiler, and thicken with the flour which has been mixed with the water. Cook for 5 minutes. Add the beaten eggs, the cheese, the pepper and the salt. Cook slowly until the cheese has melted and the mixture is thick and creamy. Allow it to cool, then add the baking powder. The cheese mixture is then ready to spread on the toast.

Toast just one side of the bread. Spread the cheese mixture thickly on the untoasted side to the very edge. If the cheese mixture does not come to the edges of the bread they become brown and hard. Brown the cheese delicately under a low gas flame or in the oven. The slow heat allows the cheese mixture to heat through before it browns, gives it a chance to become light and keeps the cheese tender and soft. Too great heat makes the cheese tough and stringy. If desired, place a strip of crisp bacon across each slice of cheese toast. Serve it hot from the oven. This recipe makes enough for twelve to fourteen slices of bread. The cheese mixture may be prepared—except for the baking powder—the day before it is to be used. Since the mixture stiffens on standing, heat until soft in a double boiler, let it cool and add the baking powder. Then spread the cheese on the toast.

WILLIAM LYON PHELPS on FORGETTING

I HAVE lived with Irish setter dogs for 40 years, and although I like nearly all dogs, the red Irish setter seems to me the most finished and accomplished and trustworthy canine gentleman. Perhaps that is because I know him better than I know other dogs. We often dislike people because we do not know them well enough. Familiarity breeds contempt only in contemptible minds.

All dogs are profane; they have the unfortunate habit of swearing at other dogs, and after an unpleasant interview they trot along by themselves, indulging in profane soliloquies.

When my Irish setter is insulted by another dog on the street, the hairs on the back of his neck stand up straight, as though each hair were a red wire. Then, after an exchange of repartee with the other dog, he moves along by himself, but those hairs still stand erect; and you can see that the other dog, or the insult received, is still on his mind. But gradually these stiff hairs relax, fall back into place, which means that he is forgetting his enemy.

And the moment he forgets his enemy, and not before, my dog has serenity and peace of mind.

I suppose it is a good thing to possess a vivid memory, so long as we possess the memory and the memory does not possess us. It is a good thing to have a well-furnished mind, with its contents so orderly that we can at any moment refer to the useful fact or idea. But while it is annoying and sometimes distressing not to be able to remember something at the proper time, it is often tragic not to be able to forget.

Which is the greater compliment to a woman? To tell her after a long absence that you have remembered her, or that you have tried in vain to forget her?

Just as the memory can be cultivated and strengthened by assiduous practice, so I believe that the art of forgetting can be developed to the great advantage of the forgetter.

Of course if one tries hard to forget some particular person or thing, one will remember all the more vividly. The art of forgetting can not be successfully practiced by concentrating the willpower on endeavoring to forget one incident. But this great and noble and rewarding art can be developed by two methods—first, by saying to oneself that the unpleasantness is not really so important as it seems; second, by saying to oneself that today, Sunday, I am feeling very much depressed by this thing, but that in a few days I shall not feel so bad, and in two weeks I shall not feel bad at all. For that is the way of all flesh; time brings into our minds other things that help to erase torturing thoughts. Even other troubles will help. It was Shakespeare who pleaded for a big calamity to happen at once, so that other thoughts of woe would not be so painful.

The art of forgetting must be practiced both on the good things we do and on the evil things that happen to us. A self-conscious philanthropist is not admirable. A man who does a vast amount of good in the world and expects a vast amount of credit for it, will not receive much, and will suffer in his pride. A man who adds to our knowledge by independent discoveries in scholarship or in science, and then is angry or hurt because his name is not mentioned with sufficient praise, may rightly be viewed with suspicion. Was his work motivated by a sincere desire to add to the world's knowledge, or was his motive merely vanity?

The inner essence of virtue, the luner essence of dignity, is to forget that we have any. The lasting value of our good deeds, so far as they can aid in the development of our character, consists in our forgetting them. In summing up the real, positive good accomplished by any man in his journey from the cradle to the grave, Wordsworth said,

On that best portion of a good man's life,
His little, nameless, unremembered, acts
Of kindness and of love.

Conceit, desire for recognition and applause, turn the fragrance of generosity into an evil smell.

But even more important for our own tranquillity, peace of mind, contentment, and happiness is the ability to forget both injuries and those who have injured us. So long as we remember the blows of our enemies, just so long are those blows effective. The moment we can not only forgive, but forget, we rob those blows of all their force. As the bumblebee makes want and woe ridiculous by sleeping through it, so we make our enemies ridiculous by forgetting them. It is difficult to be attacked, insulted, misrepresented, ridiculed, and forget all about it; but I know it can be done. Fill the mind with other things and there will be no room for wounded pride. All these attacks upon us hurt because we are vain and egotistic. Let us cease being vain and egotistic.

In a world like this, if one wishes peace of mind, it is essential to forget misfortunes and injuries. To harbor them by dwelling upon them is like encouraging the growth of poison in the body, instead of trying to expel it. Forgetfulness is the mother of peace. As Browning says,

Good, to forgive;
Best, to forget;
Living, we fret;
Dying, we live.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of "Helen and Warren" Characters.

A List-Your-Enemies Pamphlet Prompts Helen's Quixotic Urge.

ONLY a square gray envelope, addressed in a familiar back-hand!

Yet with clutching dread, Helen shrank from opening it. The first response to her reckless impulse!

Sorry now she had ever seen that "Friendship" booklet. With its persuasive plea—to list one's enemies and send each a copy.

And she had! Mailed in an emotional glow—no think-it-over caution.

Now Mrs. Hayes' answer. An understanding one? Or a chilling rebuff?

Tearing it open. The few lines swept in an eager glance.

Dear Mrs. Curtis,

Just received the inspiring booklet on "The Sovereignty of Friendship." Have read every word. Dear of you to send it!

Sorry we have seen so little of each other lately. Can't you have tea with me tomorrow? Cordially,

Roberta Loring Hayes.

Thrilled exultation. Always when she yielded to an emotional impulse—an unselfish impulse—it did come right!

Drawing the shades against the rain-gloomed dusk. Turning on the lamps—a cheerful response to her restored buoyancy.

Those leaflets found yesterday while browsing over a book stall. Only a few pages—but the message so convincing she had bought half a dozen.

And that slip in the back!

Free your heart from the poison of hate! List all those you believe enemies. Send them each a copy of this little booklet . . .

The try-it urge irresistible. No real enemies. But three friends estranged by petty misunderstandings.

Mrs. Hayes hostilely aloof ever since their tell-the-truth seance. Her unfair indignation at the solicited criticism.

But Helen no longer resentful. Now aglow with pamphlet-prompted friendliness. And for the others on her brief list.

Mrs. Walsh, on the ninth floor, not even speaking when they met in the elevator. Because she'd taken Anna! Yet the girl had left voluntarily a month before.

And Mrs. Robbins, who had sent her luster-pitcher gift to that rummage sale.

Not expect everyone to share her love for antiques. And how often she had passed on gifts herself! No excuse for lingering indignation.

Hereafter try never to harbor animosity. Nothing more corrosive.

Follow the other precept of that stimulating booklet—reread it once a week. Keep in mind the "affirmations of friendship."

Still on the heights of exalted resolves when Warren banged in.

"Dear, you're drenched!" greeting him in the hall. "Didn't you take a taxi?"

"Couldn't nail one," kicking off his rubbers. "Anything on tomorrow night, Kitten? Duncan's in town. How about asking him to dinner?"

"Why, couldn't we make it the next day? I'd be so hurried—I'm having tea with Mrs. Hayes."

"Huh, thought you two weren't so thick any more?"

"But it's all right now!" darting after him to the library. "I got the nicest letter from her today. Wait, I want you to read it."

Scanning the note, he tossed it down with a noncommittal grunt.

"Dear, I just followed an impulse and sent her that little booklet. A really wonderful——"

"Dinner's ready, ma'am," announced Anna from the door.

Helen still elated as they crossed to the dining room. Yielding to the indiscreet tell-him-about-it temptation.

"Sounds like a slushy blurb!" shaking out his napkin.

"I know most of them are—but this wasn't. The way it showed the poison of resentment! And a slip in the back—a suggestion to send copies to anyone from whom you were estranged."

"Suggestion, eh?" he chuckled, spooning into his cream of spinach. "And you fell for it! Pretty low on sales resistance."

"Dear, it was perfectly sincere. You sensed that! And you see it worked!"

"On a sentimental jane! Couldn't pull that goo on a man."

"It's not goo!" flushing. "If you'd just read it——"

"No brushy book artist can wise me up on friendship. Shove over that bread."

Why had she told him? Always cynical contempt of her emotional impulses.

She had done the right thing! Not let him spoil it for her. Just not discuss it——

"Spring that sob stuff on anybody else?" he grinned, pushing back his soup plate. "With all your faux pas—must have a healthy list of enemies!"

"You know I haven't!" indignantly. "I only sent two other copies."

"Two more victims, eh?" crunching a celery stalk. "Shoot—who were they?"

"Mrs. Walsh," lowering her voice. "You know how she's been since Anna came here. And so unjust! Why, Anna'd left her a month before."

"Huh, if you bring that dame around, good job! Fed up with her refrigerating stares. Great guns, veal cutlets? Had 'em for lunch."

"I'm sorry, dear. Would you rather have an omelette? No? And I sent the other to Mrs. Robbins. I thought——"

"Good grief, she's not the gushy type," digging into the broccoli. "Probably have a good laugh over your little preachment."

"You think she'd take it that way?" shrinking at his ardor-cooling ridicule.

"Hope not," grimly, wielding his knife. "Keep running into Robbins at the club. Wouldn't expect a man to notice a thing like that—but he's an old fusspot. Been darn offish ever since you had that row with her."

"A row! Why you know I never quarrel——"

"Well, you were hopping mad about something she did. This broccoli's great—ought to have it oftener."

"I was just hurt when she sent my luster pitcher to that rummage sale. She found out I'd seen it and she was furious!"

"Naturally, when they chuck your presents—don't like to be caught at it!"

"That's why I sent her the booklet!" triumphantly. "So she'll know it's all right—that I want to be friendly. What is it, Anna?"

"The boy brung this, ma'am," a curious glance. "From Mrs. Walsh."

A small equivocal package. Under the rubber band a blue envelope.

"Oh, it is coming out right!" Helen jubilant. "She's even sent me something."

With a hairpin, breathlessly ripping open the envelope. A stiff, angular script:

Dear Mrs. Curtis:

So kind of you to send me the touching lecture on "Friendship!" However, am returning it with thanks, as I feel you need it far more than I do. Doris E. Walsh.

Stunned incredulity. No, no, she couldn't mean that——

Conscious of her scorching crimson as she stared at the note. Still flaunting the same insolent message!

"Now what's up?" Warren broke the poignant silence. "Red as a stoplight! Didn't she fall for your love-your-neighbor line?"

"To write a thing like that!" quivering indignation. "How could she——"

"Let's have a look," reaching over for the letter. Then, with an astounded whistle. "Of all the tabby comebacks! Turned you down cold, eh?"

Her throat taut. Helen not trusting herself to answer. So this was Mrs. Walsh's reaction to her be-friends overture!

Realising now how her gesture must have appeared. Preachy, overeffusive——

"Come on, Kitten, imbibe some nourishment," a prosaic check to her tormenting self-reproach. "Don't let that crabby cluck put you off your feed."

"Mrs. Robbins!" another stabbing thought. "Suppose she takes it that way, too?"

"More'n likely. Ought to squelch those slushy inspirations. Always lettin' you in for trouble."

With a dismissing shrug, callously devoting himself to the veal cutlets.

Helen not even pretending to eat. Visualizing the Robbins. Perhaps at this minute laughing over the booklet. Composing a scathing answer.

Oh, why had she ever sent it? And to her! Hard, sophisticated

---

And Mr. Robbins! Increased awkwardness at the club for Warren.

Still agonizing over her rash impulse when they left the table.

In the library, wretchedly unwrapping the booklet.

Starring at the once-alluring title, "The Sovereignty of Friendship."

Read it again! Perhaps she could recapture that friendly warmth.

Resentment is corrosive. Hate destroys. But love is curative. Love heals all enmity . . .

That was true—she knew it! Then why, when she had done her part——

Starting up to answer the clanging phone. Struggling for poise.

"Hello? . . . This is Mrs. Curtis . . . Oh! . . . Did—did you really? I thought so, too . . . Friday? Wait, I'll ask Warren."

Covering the mouthpiece, she whirled about with an ecstatic.

"Mrs. Robbins! They want us for dinner Friday night——"

"Okay," a quizzical glance over his book.

"Hello! . . . No, we've nothing on. We'll be glad to come . . . Yes, at seven."

Dancing up to Warren, she lighted on his chair arm.

"Dear, it does come out right!" exuberantly hugging him. "You should follow your emotions! She was awfully nice—so cordial."

"Huh, takes a female to fall for that sentimental slop," cleaning out his pipe. "Figured that's what would get you, eh?"

"Why, I didn't do it in that spirit! That booklet made me really feel friendly. It took away every bit of resentment!"

"Slush—but sincere slush!" he grinned. "Well, glad you patched it up with the Robbins. Darned more comfortable all around. That send-a-copy sales line pretty crude. But got results—brought down two out of three. For peace propaganda that's a knock-out!"

BOOKS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

"BOOK WEEK" will be celebrated this year from November 16 to 22. At the same time will be observed "Children's Book Week," which has as its laudable aim the training of the readers of tomorrow to enjoy and demand good literature.

Those concerned with the steady progress of literature through the generations will realize how fertile of good such an annual occasion may prove to be. Let the children of the Nation read trash in childhood and in a generation or two the whole people will find its mental food in such material. Some idea of the widespread interest in children's book week may be gathered from the fact that special programs will be held in 2,000 communities during those seven days. Book reviewers state that this year offers a wealth of children's books never before surpassed in high standards of text and appearance.

Authors may not always make fortunes, though nowadays they have a better chance of doing so than the Victorians had. Always, however, they are in the way of being written about after death, as they themselves wrote before death.

It is a poor author of today who does not sooner or later get a literary monument, even if its inscription may also include criticism. The only thing left now is to evolve some system of memorializing good readers. Surely they should meet with some reward for their patience and long suffering.

The Swedish government is supervising the publications of the complete story of the Andre polar expedition being prepared by an editorial committee of the Royal Geographic Society of Sweden.

FORTY SINGING SEAMEN. By Alfred Noyes. (Frederick A. Stokes & Co., New York.)

A new volume of poems by Alfred Noyes is an event in any book season. True, the subject matter is not particularly new to Noyes adherents but in a setting provided by the artistic genius of Elizabeth MacKinstry, who has illustrated them with gorgeous color and stunningly effective reed-pen drawings. Six of these illustrations are in full color and Miss MacKinstry's vivid imagination ran riot among the colors on her palette while she was painting the originals of these illustrations. All of Noyes' humor, his delicious interpretation of human nature, his vigorous portrayals of men who go down to the sea in ships have been delineated by the artist in novel and unforgettable form.

The lure, the romance and the rousing lilt in Noyes' poems are even more fascinating in this new dress. Just to dip into the book here and there is certain to bring up nuggets of verse. Rejoice in the swing of stanzas like this one:

And the earth went round, and our hearts went round,
And never a word we sung:
Half a hundred staggering pirates
When the world was young.

Here they march in this saga of the sea, Black Bill on his honeymoon, the admiral divested of earthly trappings running about in ghostly habiliments, Bacchus holding high jinks with the pirates and the terrible highwaymen who adored carrying a long dirk in his teeth, evidently "just for the feel of it." A motley crew, perhaps, these mariners bold of Noyes. But how they refresh the soul and recreate for the reader the days "when the world was young." Thanks, Mr. Noyes. You have proved again that a classic indeed has life eternal.

THE EDGE OF THE UNKNOWN, by Arthur Conan Doyle. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

This is the last book from the pen of the late Conan Doyle and quite in keeping with the absorbing interest of his latter years it is not one of his inimitable Sherlock Holmes stories, but deals instead with the primary question of humanity—life after death.

However one may question the conclusions Conan Doyle reached through his investigations, his sincerity and real belief in his own theories can not be denied even by the most skeptical. Out of his research Sir Arthur Conan Doyle found comfort for his own soul and for the many who followed his teachings. He gave voice to the eternal longing of the human soul—immortality. Who shall say he was mistaken in his unfailing faith that he had communicated with the dead? Sir Arthur died firm in the faith that not only was there a life after this life, but that psychic revelation to those left in this world was possible.

As Hamlet said to Horatio: "There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy," and the author of "The Edge of the Unknown" did not find it difficult with his fine intelligence to believe certain psychic theories some of the rest of us have been obliged to discard with our adult years. For instance, belief in fairies. These wee people of the borderland of existence were no mystery to Sir Conan Doyle. He devotes a whole chapter in his book to the serious discussion of them. He calls them "Dwellers on the Border" and gave an excellent description of them when he termed them "elemental forms of life, invisible to the normal eye, which inhabit the same planet as ourselves." It is rather odd to read a twentieth century writer's outline which sounds as it might have been written in legendary England, so far as belief in fairies, elves and other sprites is concerned.

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD. PRIZE STORIES, 1930. Edited by Blanche Colton Williams. (Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.)

Once more the cream of the short story output of the United States is assembled in book form in memory of an American author, admittedly a master of the concentrated fiction school. This is the twelfth year of the awards through the O. Henry memorial committee, which included this year Herschel Bricknell, John Macy, Frances Gilchrist Wood, with Blanche Colton Williams, chairman. It is stated on behalf of the committee that the judges found it difficult to select the prize winners in that the general level was unusually high and opinion was sharply divided. Yet the candidates represented a cross section of American authors.

Familiar names to magazine readers, such as W. R. Burnett, Elizabeth Madox Roberts, Marc Connelly, Roark Bradford and Julia Peterkin, are to be found among those of the winners. But there are several newcomers, notably John Held, jr., the caricaturist. Washington has representation in an adopted Washingtonian, Capt. John W. Thomason, jr., U. S. M. C., whose story "Born On an Iceberg" is one of the best in the book.

CICERO. Translated by J. H. Freese.
ATHENAEUS. Translated by C. B. Gulick.
JOSEPHUS IV: JEWISH ANTIQUITIES. Translated by H. St. J. Thackeray.
THE GEOGRAPHY OF STRABO. Translated by H. L. Jones.
PLATO. REPUBLIC I. Translated by Paul Shorey.
The Loeb Classical Library (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; Heinemann, London).

These latest additions to Loeb's Classical Library mark a red letter day for Greek and Latin scholars. While the English text of the translations is given in each volume, yet the original Greek or Latin is printed, as well.

The books are printed in clear type and the introductions are worthy of the principal themes, clarifying the text for the most casual scholar and bringing in relief the historical incidents on which the originals were founded. No school, college or layman interested in the classics can afford to be without these books.

WOLSEY. By Hilaire Belloc. (J. P. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia, Pa.)

Hilaire Belloc has justified our expectations in this book and has dealt with a virile historical character in a virile and intensely fascinating way. He dispensed, as usual, with the raw details of narrative. Belloc in this newest life of the great cardinal has shown not only Wolsey's own life, but the influence it had on the times in which he lived. The author did not attempt to gloss over any of the incidents which show the cardinal in none too favorable a light. He was too great a historian to do this.

Throughout the book Belloc makes it clear that Wolsey held the balance of power and of good, and that it lay with him more than with any other man then in the world whether or not good or evil should prevail.

That he failed was due perhaps more to human weakness than to lack of ability. The world claimed too much of him and he did not give enough back to it unselfishly. Wolsey knew little of the right use of power, the acid test, always, of the great and the good.

With swift, sure strokes of a vivid brush Belloc painted Wolsey's rapid rise to power from obscurity. The days of King Henry VIII are vividly pictured. We see Wolsey the most powerful figure in the kingdom and watch with misty eyes his dramatic fall even to that last hour when he lamented that he had not served his God as well as he had his king.

IN OUR TIME. By Ernest Hemingway. With an introduction by Edmund Wilson. (Charles Scribner & Sons, New York.)

This collection of short stories takes the reader around the world into strange lands and familiar scenes alike.

While this is purely fiction, the powers of description of this writer in a first book and his clever art of depicting of characters in a most realistic manner, give it a slant of realism much in demand at the present hour in such books.

Most of the stories deal with the life of a growing boy in the Northwestern part of our continent. The period of the war is dealt with a firm and fearless pen from the outlook of a sensitive and candid boy. The young man in these stories is just the boy who went fishing at Big Two Hearted River, grown up.

An Attic Salt-Shaker

By W. Orton Tewson

ONE DAY, in Washington, President Taft and some friends, including Maj. Archie Butt, his military aide, were out horseback riding when they came across a little Negro boy fishing. The youngster's whole attitude seemed to amuse the President who rode up to him and said:

"Have you caught any fish?"

"Not any yet," replied the boy.

"Then what are you fishing for?" asked the President, his whole face enveloped in a smile.

• • • •

Without answering, the boy turned round and, after looking quizzically at the President for a moment, said:

"Is you Mr. Taft?"

"Yes," said the President.

"Well, then I'm just a-fishing to be a-fishing," said the urchin and went to work again.

The President laughed immoderately at this reply, says Archie Butt (in "Taft and Roosevelt: The Intimate Letters of Archie Butt"), and kept repeating it "as if it amused him way down to the depths."

"I guess that is the way with most of us," he said. "'Just a-fishing to be a-fishing.'"

• • • •

Which recalls Phil May's famous black-and-white drawing depicting a man fishing on the bank of a stream. Behind him is the high wall of a lunatic asylum. Looking over the wall is an inmate. He catches the eye of the angler and says:

"Fishing?"

"Yes," nods the fisherman.

"Caught anything?"

"No."

"Been fishing long?"

"Since yesterday morning," replied the angler.

"Come inside!" says the lunatic.

• • • •

On another occasion Mr. Taft and some friends, including the indispensable Archie Butt, were out for a tramp in Washington when they came to the flower beds in front of the Agricultural Department. The President thought he would like to pick some flowers himself for Mrs. Taft, who was ill at the time, and he went among the roses. Maj. Butt turned his attention to the peonies, while another member of the party began to gather pansies.

• • • •

"In a few minutes there was the greatest yelling I ever heard from the watchman, who put us all under arrest," wrote Archie Butt in a letter to his sister. Suddenly the old watchman recognized the President.

"I was just wondering how long we would be allowed to steal Uncle Jimmy's flowers without being arrested," said Mr. Taft, laughingly.

"I am put here for a purpose, and I have to obey my orders whether it is the President or not," ventured the watchman.

• • • •

"Right you are," said the President. "Do you want me to go to the station house with you? But I must ask you to let off these other gentlemen, as they were only acting under my orders."

By this time the old fellow was so embarrassed that he was speechless, "so we simply walked off, and he lost his chance to become famous for the minute by arresting the President of the United States," adds Maj. Butt.

Queen Victoria was very proud of the fact that Mendelssohn taught her singing, declares E. F. ("Dodo") Benson, novelist son of a former Archbishop of Canterbury (in "As We Were.")

"Once, when quite an old woman," says Mr. Benson, "she suddenly said to Alick Yorke, who was in waiting, that after lunch she would sing duets. Some one sat down at the piano to play the accompaniment, and the queen propped up on the table between the two vocalists a copy of Gilbert and Sullivan's opera 'Patience,' and found the place. She said, 'Now, Mr. Yorke, you begin.'

• • • •

"Mr. Yorke obediently sang to the queen:

"'Prithee, pretty maiden, will you marry me?'

"He got through his verse fairly well, and then the queen in a very clear soft voice sang:

"'Gentle Sir, although to marry I'm inclined.'

She was much pleased with herself, and stopped in the middle of her verse to say:

"'You know, Mr. Yorke, I was taught singing by Mendelssohn.'"

• • • •

And in the early days of her reign, Queen Victoria was taught drawing by Edward Lear, author of the famous books of nonsense rhymes—you remember, the man on the Humber, who dined on a cake of burnt umber, and the old person of Looe who said, "What on earth shall I do?" and him who made tea in his hat, and him in whose beard such an embarrassing variety of birds habitually nested.

That Lear was also an exquisite artist in landscape, is not so generally known.

• • • •

One morning when Queen Victoria had finished her drawing lesson, she asked Lear whether he would care to see her collection of miniatures, and they went into the room at Windsor Castle where were the cases containing that unique series.

"But Mr. Lear did not think very much of them," chuckles E. F. Benson. "He sniffed and shook his head over them, he gave them only the cursory glances of indifference and doubtfully asked the queen where she had 'got' them (as if she had picked them up at some second-hand dealers). She very courteously replied, 'I inherited them, Mr. Lear.' So there was not very much more to be said about that."

Speaking of nonsense rhymes, Mr. Benson says that both Tennyson and Swinburne had an affection for the form known as the "limerick." And, curiously enough, both took a sort of schoolboy pleasure in the hectic situations which it sometimes disclosed.

"Shall I tell our visitor about the man of Peru?" Swinburne once asked his friend, Watts-Dunton.

"I think that goes a little too far, Algernon," was the reply, and so the doings of the man from Peru remained shrouded in a discreet mystery.

There is a tale of a newly rich society woman who was giving a very grand soiree and thought she might be able to get as the lion of the evening a great violinist—I think it was Ysaye—and perhaps he'd play for nothing if she asked him as a guest, chuckles Peggy Wood (in "Actors—And People"). She wrote a charming note inviting him, to which he replied that he would be enchanted to accept. Then she wrote again, wondering if he wouldn't bring his violin, to which he answered that in that case the fee would be so much.

• • • •

Rather piqued at this, she wrote once more that she would pay the fee, of course, but would he mind coming in through the servants' entrance?

"Not at all," he said.

• • • •

The night of the soiree came around. The great violinist played. Every one said, "How did she get him to do it?" and crowded into supper, where she promised to introduce him to them all. But when they arrived there was no violinist to be found.

• • • •

Frantically she searched the house for him, and found him dining in the servants' hall.

"Ah, madame," he said sweetly, "you wished to put me in my place, and I am in it."

Nothing could persuade him to leave the servants' dining room. He finished his meal with apparent enjoyment and left by the servants' entrance.

"Bloomers," it seems, were invented by Elizabeth Smith Miller, who wanted a dress in which she could easily take long walks. Later, the costume—consisting of a small jacket, a full skirt descending a little below the knee, and trousers down to the ankle—was worn and enthusiastically sponsored by Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, editor of The Lily, and her name was given it.

• • • •

Lucy Stone and other leaders wore the costume for a little while, but abandoned it as giving rise to needless disagreeable criticism of them, so it became necessary to revert again to the long, trailing skirts of the day. When short skirts were suggested in place of bloomers, says Alice Stone Blackwell (in "Lucy Stone: Pioneer of Woman's Rights"), Susan B. Anthony somberly remarked:

"It would only be said that the bloomers have doffed their pants the better to display their legs."

Wild Life Returning to Its Haunts

within areas administered by the United States Forest Service. The service keeps a rough count of the big game on its vast but scattered domain. The last estimates are as of December 1, 1929. Let those who think that they must go to Canada or Africa for royal sport note some of the figures yielded by the count. The Forest Service's rangers reported more than 800,000 deer in the National Forests, other than ones in Alaska, and 80,000 elk, together with some 50,000 black or brown, and 2,500 grizzly bear. They also reported more than 10,000 antelope, the big game animal indigenous to this country which, next to the buffalo, has seemed least adjustable to human contacts in the open. There were, according to the rangers' estimates, more than 5,000 moose, about 20,000 mountain goats and some 12,000 mountain sheep on Federal lands reserved primarily for trees. In the national forests of Alaska there are of course many of all the foregoing and several other kinds of big game. Only recently there were transported across the country twenty-four musk oxen that were purchased in Greenland for use in restocking this country's Far Northern regions with a big game animal of late extinct on the mainland of North America where it once was numerous.

Findings of Forest Service and others show that there are lots of big game in the United States, but the sportsmen-conservationists say that there is much room and need for greater quantities of both big and little game and also birds. Further great increase is involved with many problems. Given proper protection and suitable living conditions, game animals increase in numbers very fast. Already in one national forest, the Kaibab, in northern Arizona, deer are so numerous as to be threatened with the direful calamities portended by the Malthusian law of population increase. The animals are encroaching precariously on and even destroying sources of their food supplies. Efforts have been made, but without much success, to check excessive increase by removing animals to other areas, and, in one instance, by killing a large number of them en masse. During the last three seasons hunters have taken more than 40,000 deer out of the Kaibab, but nearly all the authorities say that too many of the animals still are there. Some of them declare that similar conditions of overincrease exist in the Crook and Gila National Forests.

Such conditions have beset the large elk herds which still range the region of the Yellowstone National Park. There are two of these herds. One's winter range is south of the park in the Jackson Hole area, where ranches are operated for producing food for the animals when deprived by heavy snows of the grasses they dig from mountain sides. Several times in recent years available food supplies were insufficient and many of the animals died of starvation. The last count, made four years ago, indicated the presence of about 19,000 elk in that herd. Since then weather conditions have been good, and apparently only a few hundred a year have been taken by licensed hunters.

Ranchers wage a constant warfare on the big cats which have a weakness for colts as well as sheep and cattle. Hunts, such as is shown in the etching, are frequent and a good mountain lion dog is an animal of consequence in that country.

A hard winter may again bring to public notice next spring the sanguine risks run by big game amidst the habitations of men. The other herd, which is broadly of two divisions, does its winter ranging north of the park, largely in the Gallatin and Lewis and Clark National Forests. When last counted it was not quite as numerous as the southern one, but some of the authorities on elk life say that its situation is potentially the most precarious of all.

The elk may be hunted, but restrictions on the sport are so rigid and the cost of it to nonresident sportsman so impressive that elk shooting is not engaged in nearly as much as it used to be. The bag limit in both Wyoming and Montana is one elk a season, nonresident licenses cost $40 to $50 and guides and a good deal of equipment are needed. Only 1,279 elk were reported as taken by hunters in Wyoming last year.

Many game animals, notably elk and deer, are unmindful of the rights of ranchmen and farmers in localities where wild animals range under the protective arm of the law. This often presents a difficult problem. Pennsylvania authorities have wrestled mightily with the problem but without noteworthy success so far. As a rule sportsmen have opposed any lessening for the purpose of curtailing big game increase, of hunting restrictions. Generally only male deer, or bucks, of mature age may be shot legally. In Pennsylvania this has brought about a puzzling sex problem of wild deer management as well as annoying controversies with farmers whose fields are often overrun by the animals. This year they are permitting hunters to kill female, or does, in Pennsylvania and also in the Kaibab.

So successful has been the State's game propagation program that Pennsylvania now ranks second for number of hunting licenses sold. The first ranking State in that respect is not of a region traditionally noted for good hunting. It is New York State, where nearly 700,000 persons took out hunting and fishing licenses last year.

In the country as a whole nearly 6,500,000 persons now take out hunting licenses annually, and probably as many more hunt without licenses. The statistics do not indicate that preponderant city living has no softened the average American as to greatly reduce traditional eagerness in this country for the most elemental of sports—that of matching wits with wild-life denizens of field, forest and stream. Hunting is a cruel sport, many people now say. But the sportsmen reply: No more cruel, if pursued in a sportsmanlike manner, than is the killing for food of the thousands of domesticated creatures slaughtered every day.

A UNION WITHIN THE UNION

that other organizations were ready to "sell out" to congressional opposition and accept a less liberal measure.

A general salary increase was given Government workers in the Welch act in 1928 and inequalities in its administration were corrected by the Brookhart-Lehlbach act, effective July 3, 1930. The Welch act added $22,000,000 to the pay roll of Federal employes and provided for classification of employes in the "field," that is, outside of Washington.

It would be difficult to enumerate all that Government workers have accomplished since organizing. The employes' compensation act was amended so that "injury" would include disease as well as accident. From time to time, increased appropriations have been obtained for the custodial, customs, immigration, mint, animal industry and other services.

There are irons still in the fire. Hearings have been obtained on several important bills. One provides for a minimum salary of $1,500 a year for all adult employes working full time. Another provides for a six-day week, for many of Uncle Sam's employes are not given even the Sabbath as a day of rest. Still another important measure provides for standardized annual and sick leave as a matter of law. At present leave is a matter of the whim of the employe's superior and varies between one department and another.

Federal employes who are unionized are not going around all the time with their hands extended. They have made it an organization policy to make reasonable demands, and their procedure was thus explained to the writer by their national president, Luther C. Steward:

"In addition to its legislative accomplishments the federation has, through cooperative effort with the various governmental departments, secured adjustments in literally thousands of cases affecting both groups and individuals. The National Federation of Federal Employes has from the first striven not alone for the improvement of conditions of Federal employes but also for the improvement of the governmental machinery, and is justly proud of the fact that every one of its legislative proposals have been economically sound and approved by the highest possible authorities on public personnel matters."

One fact that this statement naturally does not include is that the organization is headed by a man who has been recognized as an expert in personnel matters. Mr. Steward had a varied background of Federal employment himself before he came to his present position. At various times in his public service career he was identified with the Civil Service Commission, the Railway Mail Service, Immigration Service, and the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor. Among the important posts he held was supervision over a large immigration district in the Southwest and the position of director of control, United States Employment Service. He is a law graduate and has ably stood before congressmen, members of the Cabinet and various Chief Executives in defense of the pleas of his fellow unionists.

When the National Federation of Federal Employes was organized, Mr. Steward was its first vice president. That was in September, 1917. In July, the following year, he was elected president and has held that office continuously ever since.

There are members who disagree with him, of course, but his successful championship of Federal employes has placed him in the position of virtual indispensability. And when Government officials disagree with the head of the N. F. F. E. they must have a good reason. If they have one, he will not attempt to bulldoze them. It is not his technique.

One high Government official not long ago commented upon Mr. Steward in a way that was the highest tribute he could have paid. "We are always glad to see Mr. Steward," he said, "for we know he is not going to ask us for anything we can not be expected in reason to grant him."

Luther C. Steward is a combination that is a happy one from the employes' standpoint, of a man who holds the respect of their superiors as well as one who stands high in the councils of organized labor. He is a close friend of the leaders of the movement, from William Green, president of the A. F. of L., on down through the heads of the national and international affiliated bodies.

With well over 40 per cent of the Government workers in Washington women, it is appropriate that one of their sex is the other national officer of the organization who is Mr. Steward's counselor at the federation's headquarters in Washington. Gertrude M. McNally, national secretary-treasurer, is a woman who has known from personal experience the vicissitudes of the woman worker. Her service in the ranks of Government employes was in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where is printed the national paper currency, postage and revenue stamps and Government securities. A large proportion of its personnel is composed of women. They work as printers' assistants, as counters of money and at various other jobs that are a strain on a woman's physique and nervous system. From this experience, Miss McNally learned the needs of the girls and women who toil for Uncle Sam and she has translated that knowledge into her part in the labor movement.

Mention has been made of the varied tasks that are performed by the Federal employes who compose the federation's membership. Their jobs are innumerable. They are found in every section of the country. At home they are truly public servants. They guard the public health, not only through the United States Public Health Service but also through the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, which insure the healthful condition of live stock and meats placed on the market. Those employed by the Treasury Department collect all the taxes and make all the money, paper and metallic, collect import duties and prevent smuggling.

Even in the War and Navy Departments civilian Federal workers are found. They not only do clerical tasks, but work at various mechanical trades at the Army posts. They help to make the munitions of war and work as scientists in laboratories.

Department of Justice employes operate the Federal prisons and supervise fingerprint operations. In the Department of Interior Federal employes teach in the Indian schools, classify public lands and examine their structures through the General Land Office and Geological Survey. They build dams for irrigation and make arid lands bloom again. They man the national parks and provide for the comfort of thousands of visitors to these garden spots of America.

In the Department of Agriculture Federal employes prepare scientific information regarding agriculture, dairy products, plant industry, animal husbandry and weather forecasting. Problems relating to the home and dealing with food, economic home management and textiles are studied. The national forests are maintained and protected from fire and other hazards.

During the last year Government workers in the Department of Commerce have been taking the census, and in the same department they gather a tremendous amount of statistical information on innumerable matters of commercial importance. They survey the coasts and enforce the navigation laws, study the production and utilization of ores, oils, gases and other mineral substances, besides safeguarding the health of the miners. The lives of travelers on large bodies of water are protected, and at the Bureau of Standards wonders are performed, ranging from the measurement of a tiny electrical impulse to weighing the world.

Those employed in the Department of Labor collect information concerning labor conditions and investigate controversies between employer and employe, frequently settling their differences. Child welfare and improvement of conditions for the woman worker are studied. Immigration and naturalization laws are enforced by the same department.

Many so-called independent establishments provide other varied tasks. The Library of Congress preserves more than 3,000,000 books and registers trade-marks and grants copyrights. The Government Printing Office is Uncle Sam's print shop. The laws affecting interstate commerce and the tariff are enforced. The Panama Canal workers play an important part in world trade, while auditing Government accounts is still another one of the tasks of Federal employes.

Federal employes are selected on the basis of demonstrated fitness through civil service examinations. More than 200,000 persons are examined annually to fill 50,000 vacancies. There are 900 different types of examinations held each year. Applicants must be in sound health and of good character. Those who are successful in passing these tests have their names placed on a register, and from this list the appointing officer makes his selections.

That Uncle Sam secures a high type of worker is attested by a member of the Civil Service Commission who knows their virtues and faults by reason of his position.

"Federal employes need apologize to no other class of workers," declared Commissioner George R. Wales in commenting on Government personnel. "They have won their places in fair, open competition and have been adjudged competent and trustworthy through a personnel system which is acknowledged as the most scientific and thorough in existence."

UNCLE SAM'S WORKING ARMY

UNCLE SAM employs 868,918 persons.

There are 440,000 Federal positions classified under the civil service law. The principle of unionization among Federal employes has complete executive, legislative and judicial approval.

Prior to organization into a nonstriking union not a single benefit applicable to all had been obtained by Federal employes in 60 years.

Embassy and consulate staffs, members of the National Federation of Federal Employes, are to be found in every quarter of the civilized world.

Although affiliated with the American Federation of Labor the union of Federal employes foregoes all use of the strike as a means of compelling benefits.

DUMM and DUMMER

On American Dinosaur Eggs—Montana Discovery Important, They Agree, But What They Can't Figure Out Is the Political Significance—Think Hoover May Play Cagy and Let Al Smith or Raskob Take Responsibility.

By H. I. PHILLIPS.

"I SEE," said Representative Dummer, "where an explorer has found dinosaur eggs in America."

"There is nothing the country needs less," declared Senator Dumm, scornfully.

"Unless it be the skull of a prehistoric man," corrected Dummer.

"With the United States in deep trouble, with a business depression, a crazy stock market and a complicated unemployment problem on its hands it is just like a scientific man to come to the rescue with a half dozen dinosaur eggs," said Senator Dumm. "Even if I happened to stumble on some dinosaur eggs in the present crisis I wouldn't mention it."

"They must be important," insisted Dummer, "or the newspapers wouldn't say so much about 'em."

"How much did the papers say about 'em?" asked the Senator.

"They gave 'em almost as much space as the 'Legs' Diamond shootings, the Brazilian revolution and the trouble in Cuba," said Dummer. "But I don't quite get the significance of the discovery myself."

• • • •

Just a General Nuisance.

"ALL it proves, if anything, is that we once had dinosaurs in the United States," said Senator Dumm, "but the more important fact is that we got rid of 'em."

"What was a dinosaur, anyhow?" asked Dummer.

"It was an enormous prehistoric creature that roamed the wide open space before the time of civilized man, pushing over boulders with its nose and kicking down great trees with its left hind leg," explained the senator. "It was no good to anybody and must have been a general nuisance to its fellow creatures. It was a great thing for the world when it disappeared and I never could understand why so much time has been devoted to digging it up again."

"What did it look like?"

"It looked like a cross between a Fifth avenue bus, a Burmese elephant, a crocodile magnified 300 times and P. T. Barnum's What-Is-It," explained the senator. "It was a sort of Cecil B. De Mille version of what the delirium tremens would look like in picture form."

• • • •

Nearest Kin a Crocodile.

"A FIERCE looking animal it must have been," said Dummer.

"It wasn't an animal, it was a reptile," corrected the senator, "according to strict classification. Its nearest relative today is the crocodile. In fact, from the pictures I've seen, the dinosaur was an alligator suffering from overexpansion."

"How big was it?" asked Dummer.

"It often was 75 or 80 feet over all and weighed 20 to 30 tons on the hoof. It was a very versatile creature and could walk, swim, crawl and jump as the occasion demanded and according to its mood. It had an enormous tail, which is sometimes used as a sort of tripod so it could sit up and get a bird's-eye view of the neighborhood. In this way it could raise its head 30 or 40 feet."

"I still don't believe there was any such creature," insisted Dummer.

• • • •

A Learned Dissertation.

"IT ruled the earth in the Jurassic and Cretaceous periods," declared the Senator, learnedly. "Do you know what the Jurassic and Cretaceous periods were?"

"The names sound familiar, but I don't recall the face," said Dummer, blankly.

"Well, they were periods in history away back before high-wheeled bicycles, tonsil operations, sex appeal and time payments," explained the Senator. "The only trace we get of the dinosaur today is when we happen to dig in the right spot with a pick and shovel or mashie-niblick."

"What do they do with a dinosaur when they dig one up?"

"Put it among the fossils," said the Senator. "You know what fossils are, I assume."

"Sure," replied Dummer. "The House of Representatives is full of 'em. But what did the dinosaur do except lay eggs for scientists?"

• • • •

A Very Good Egg-Layer.

"NOT very much, I gather. Egg-laying was its principal occupation and diversion. And it must have been a fairly steady layer. One egg would seem to be a life's work today, but the dinosaur was very capable in that respect and thought nothing of laying an egg a day that there in the batch this Princeton professor discovered?"

"I think there was a half dozen," said the Senator.

"Were they in good condition?"

"No egg that has been overlooked for 10,000,000 years could be classified as grade A stock," said the Senator, "but I understand they were darned good eggs for the shape they were in."

"Where were they found?" asked Dummer.

"Montana," replied Senator Dumm.

• • • •

Omelette Vs. Vaudeville.

"WAS the dinosaur egg good eating, do you suppose?" asked Dummer.

"I never ran across anybody who had eaten one," said the Senator, "but I should suppose they would have made great eggs for tossing purposes. I imagine you could have closed any vaudeville show or political rally with one throw."

"Whatever happened to the dinosaur anyhow?" asked Dummer.

"It's always been a mystery," explained the Senator, "but the Princeton explorer found some teeth beside the Montana eggs and is inclined to believe their disappearance is due to the fact that some unidentified mammal raided the nests and ate the eggs before they could be hatched."

"It probably was just as well," sighed Dummer.

"America got a break," insisted the Senator. "Can you imagine what the country would be like if nothing had ever happened to destroy its eggs and the woods were full of dinosaurs today?"

• • • •

The Dinosaur and Today.

"IT would be nice to come home from work and find the street blocked for three blocks in front of your houses by a young dinosaur parked from left to right."

"Well, anyhow," continued Senator Dumm, "whatever credit there is in discovering the eggs of the strange creature will go to a Republican administration."

"The question is whether it is a matter for credit or criticism," said Dummer.

"The Democrats will probably insist that dinosaur eggs are a nuisance and that if the American people want to be protected against them they must oust the Republican party from control," said the Senator.

"Does Hoover claim any credit for the discovery of the eggs?" asked Dummer.

• • • •

Hoover Likely to Be Cagy.

"SO much has happened to Hoover that he is very cagy about claiming credit for anything without careful consideration," explained the Senator. "If he decides the public is quite cold and indifferent to dinosaur eggs he may let the discovery stand as something for which Al Smith or Mr. Raskob is responsible."

"If I was Mr. Hoover I would ignore the matter entirely."

"Why?" asked the Senator.

"Things haven't been breaking very good for him," explained Dummer, "and it would be a terrible humiliation to go down into history as a President whose administration was distinguished chiefly by the discovery of a half dozen 10,000,000-year-old eggs."

THE HOUN' DOG GUITAR

"What's a houn' dog guitar?" asked a visitor, listening with a group of Berea College students to this instrument as played by a Berea alumnus and broadcast from a Northern station. In answer the questioner was told this story:

A farmer in Garrard County, Ky., was fond of fox hunting. Often after a hurried supper he would "blow up" his hounds and ride away for a few hours of sport. On one such expedition he traded a dog to a Negro for an old guitar.

There were ten children in the farmer's family, and this was the first such instrument the younger ones had seen. Their father, amused at his bargain, told them it was a "houn' dog guitar."

Soon all except the baby could strum tunes. A son, Bradley Kincaid, became so proficient at 4 years of age, that his parents entertained friends by having him sing and play old-time songs and Southern mountain ballads.

Bradley, when 19 years old, came to Berea College. With him he brought what he always called his "houn' dog guitar," in loving memory of the original instrument. The war came, and Bradley went overseas. Later, back in Berea, his stringed companion helped him to pay for his education, and helped him, too, to woo and win a fellow student, Miss Irma Forman.

In Chicago, where he went for further study, his talent came to the attention of a radio announcer. As a result, he has for nearly two years been performing regularly before the microphone. "Bradley and His Houn' Dog Guitar," has become a familiar announcement. And here at Berea, and in many other places in the South, and North as well, radio fans listen weekly to the Kentucky boy whose destiny was fixed by the fact that his father followed the fox hounds to the chase.

That Mouse Ear Theory.

Long before phenology became a science, farmers discovered the advancement of the native vegetation in the spring furnished reliable guides to the best time for sowing and planting crops. One old-fashioned rule, probably derived from the Indians, was that corn should be planted when the leaf of the white oak was "the size of a mouse's ear." Several traditional rules of this kind are current among farmers, and one of the tasks of the phenologists is to check them up on the basis of actual statistics.

Run o' th' Mine

THE Odyssey of the Lares and Penates, a short tale of wanderings, trials and vicissitudes from which no mover escapes, whether he travels by Conestoga wagon or automobile van, as big as a red barn. Unconsciously we put down roots into the soil of the land and the wrench of dislodging one's self is hard, but it is nothing compared with uprooting a couple of stubborn house gods.

Ours stood, quiet and well-fed on peace and the comforting glow of hearthfire, in Bryn Mawr until the Washington call came. Then they began to fidget about a bit, and their excitement mounted when the mover arrived. He came with a truck, whose general design and architectural design was not unlike that of a Lancaster County tobacco shed. Into its maw he bundled everything, well, almost everything. Bang! The big doors of the van closed; one last look at the empty rooms. Nothing there except a few imprints of baby hands on the walls where Mary Jane had tried to rid herself of second-hand "parrich." Oatmeal parrich is the stickenest stuff in the world and no amount of scrubbing would erase the sign manual of those little hands. The door is slowly closed and the Odyssey of our Lares and Penates began.

The journey to Washington was without incident so far as the human eyes could discern, but somewhere along the line of march Mr. and Mrs. Lares et Penates decided to quit the household, and they did. That is bad enough, but worse still they took with them a hamper full of curtains; a pair of trousers, virtually as good as new (only 3 years old); one shoe and a wire contraption for drying dishes. Now what in the name of common sense can Lares and Penates want with a dish drier, especially as their diet is composed of peace and comforting hearth fire glow?

Can any one explain why household gods so resent moving and why they, Puck-like, carry away goods and chattels? Or can some reader tell how to rope, throw and hog tie a brace of Lares and Penates so they can't run off with household goods in transit? The best answer to these questions will appear in 'Run o' th' Mine next Sunday, provided it is less than 200 words long.

A Southern college has decided to hold a plebiscite of its students on the curriculum, and if anybody is looking for a movement to get behind, here it is, oiled and ready. All those in favor of substituting a course in backgammon for differential calculus make their preferences known by raising their right hands. The rights have it. But why confine the vote to colleges? Elementary school pupils have their rights; give 'em a few more years and, if they live outside the District of Columbia, they can select a candidate for the United States Senate. Just think of that. Pick out a dignified boomer of platitudes just as they would a constable! Sure, let 'em vote. How would it be to drop out algebra? You'll hit quadratic equations soon, and they're tough, believe a fellow who never made the grade. You have to get four or eight or sixteen answers; plus, minus and in-between, for every problem. We'll just pop in a course in eyebrow plucking for the girls and hair slicking for the boys. All in favor, say aye.

An opera singer and an octopus found themselves bathing simultaneously in the surf at the Riviera. None of the octopus' eight arms were engaged at the moment and he embraced the lady. There was a kettle of fish! But she remembered a quotation from her school days and sang a few bars of "Asleep on"—maybe it's in—"the Deep." The octopus was so pleased he tried to applaud, but one of his left antennae and one of his right antennae, with which he aimed to applaud, missed each other. With a swish they passed to enfold his neck. Before he could untangle himself he was choked to death. "Music do have a charm to soothe the savage breast," murmured the opera lady as she swam ashore.

FOR THE WASHINGTON POST BOYS AND GIRLS

The Junior Post.

SECTION OF THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 9, 1930.

HO FOR THANKSGIVING! ONLY SEVENTEEN DAYS AWAY

Contributors to The Junior Post Must Have Their Copy in Early

DEAR POST BOYS AND GIRLS: Only seventeen more days to to Thanksgiving!

And that means only one week more to get all the poems, drawings and stories ready for the big Thanksgiving issue of The Junior Post, which will appear with The Sunday Post of November 23. The material for this number must be in the hands of your Junior Post Editor not later than November 15. Of course, I have already received some entries in the contests for the number.

Be sure and put the spirit of Thanksgiving Day into what you submit for The Junior Post. Think about what you write or draw. The reasons some of our boys and girls do not see their work appearing in The Junior Post is because they do not give enough time to its preparation.

Remember that you are competing with hundreds of boys and girls in all parts of this country and even in foreign lands who send in their work for this greatest little Junior paper in the U. S. A. Please do not use slang expressions in either your stories or on your drawings. The Junior Post wants to teach its readers to use clean, fine words that tell what you mean in the very best way. Do not load your speech with the heavy burden of slang. If you do, there will be no room left for the proper words, which, after all, can tell your story as well as slang ones.

How would you improve The Junior Post? Of course, in any human effort there is always a chance to make it still better. That is what we want to do with The Junior Post, make it better than it is today, although we are very proud of it at the present time.

Suppose you were the editor of The Junior Post. How would you make it a better paper? Sit down and think it over. For the best suggestion of not more than 800 words, a special cash prize of $3 will be awarded. That is one cent a word for the lucky winner. All suggestions must be in the hands of The Junior Post Editor, not later than December 1 to be considered for the prize.

The Junior Post Editor found the entries in the Shield contest for the Knighthood of Youth and for the pin design of the George Washington Junior Citizens of unusual merit. Our Junior Artists are certainly doing good work and I wish that the writers and poets would keep pace with them.

How near 1930 is to the end of its course in the procession of the years. It is a time when everybody should think of what the year has meant to them, whether it marks improvement and progress in school and the home life or has it been frittered away in idleness. Never forget that the most precious thing we own is time. Use it carefully and when you spend the golden hours out of the purse of Time be sure they are given for something really worth while in the form of play, learning or giving service to others. Then, indeed, will you be able to feel that your year has been well spent when 1931 peers over the edge of the world on New Year's eve.

Riches Are Not Everything

Chapter 3.

(Awarded $1.00 Prize.)

Edward got along splendidly with his job as delivery boy at the drug store, his old bike with the addition of a carrying basket doing splendidly to deliver the things to the outskirts of the town. The proprietor of the drug store saw the makings of a fine, upright boy in Edward, and they got along well together.

One day Mr. Peters, the proprietor, called Edward over to him.

Take this quickly to 79 Second street, he said. There's a little girl who is very ill and needs this at once. Edward wheeled out his bike and with the small package safely in his pocket, started off, pedaling with all his might. He knew well where Second street was—in one of the poorest districts of the town. He was not surprised, then, when he drew up before a low, rather shabby house, its once white paint discolored with soot from nearby factories, and peeling in spots. Edward sprang up the rickety steps, but there was no need of knocking. A white-faced, anxious-looking woman, who looked relieved to see him there opened the door.

Oh, she gasped, you've come at last. A smile of gratitude flitted for a moment over her careworn face. As quickly as it had come, it vanished.

But—but—she faltered. I have no money to pay you. My husband died three years ago, and I have not had work at the factory for a month. All that I have saved has gone for the doctor and medicine, and I've barely enough money left for food.

Edward did not know what to do. His embarrassed glance wandered beyond the woman to the bare but clean room. On a couch at the left of the door lay the little girl, her blue eyes bright and her thin cheeks flushed with fever. She moved restlessly on the bed and gave a little moan. The boy noticed how golden her hair was in contrast to the brilliance of her cheeks. He wanted to do something for these people. Suddenly he had an idea. "See here," he said, "I have $30 I've saved from my wages for a good watch—but I don't really need it." He fumbled in his pocket. "Here, take it please. I don't need another watch and it's a shame not to do something for her," he nodded toward the couch.

"Oh, that's so kind of you," said the woman gratefully, "but don't you see, I couldn't take it. I'll manage somehow—couldn't the druggist send me a bill? I'll find work—I must." The child moaned again and she hastened to her. Edward quickly placed the small roll of bills on a chair near the door and said goodby.

It was a very thoughtful boy who rode back. For nearly the first time in his life he had been unselfish and it was an unusual and pleasant feeling. At last something had happened to awaken him.

Rover's Diary of a Week

Monday—Well, after chewing on a bone this morning for a while I thought to run away. I had only run away once before. A man was admiring me today.

Tuesday—Well, I ran away last night. It's kind of lonesome. Here comes a small dog. Ha! Ha! It's rolled over on its back and put up his feet. That's a sign he don't want to fight.

Wednesday—Gee, I'd like to go home. I chased three cats this morning. I wish I could climb trees.

Thursday—Well folks I met Margaret last night as I was sitting up and down in front of her house on the other side. She took me in the house.

Friday—They have made up with me. Here comes a dog in my yard. Wonder what he wants? Oh! he is gone!

Saturday—I guess I will go to sleep—Oh, here comes Louise—I will scare her.

Sunday—Oh! Boy. Here comes Margaret. I want to play with her.

The Fairies' Carnival

I made a lovely fairy ring—
('Twas in the lilac's shade),
And every single moonlit night
I hid in ambuscade;

A-waiting for the fairy queen
To give a carnival,
With princesses and princes, too,
And elves and gnomes and all.

One July night,
When moonbeams bright,
Were dancing through the trees,
And in the breeze,
The flowers in their beds
Were nodding sleepy heads,
I crept out 'neath the lilac's shade,
And hid in ambuscade.
I heard the notes of pipe and flute,
And listened mute—
While nearer, nearer,
Clearer, clearer,
Came the sound—
Of Music Sweet,
And tiny feet
Upon the ground.

First came musicians . . .
Twelve all told,
And dressed in gold,
With diamonds from their caps to boots.
Their silver flutes
Sent forth sweet notes
And from the throats
Of other fairies came gay song.
Then princes strong
Rode into view,
Full-clad in blue
Of fairy hue.

Then fair faces,
Full of graces,
Rimmed in laces,
Came in sight.
And in that bright,
Soft light . . .
I saw—the queen!

Her eyes were matchless mirrors,
Twenty vesting colors: Dark and blue.
Her cheeks were of the sunset's glow
And early dawning, too.
Her glinting hair of sunbeams
Was wreathed in beads of dew.

Aurora's dress could not compare
To that worn by the queen.
The spider's web was not so fine,
Nor of such shining sheen.

Her body was lithe with a willowy grace—
As she took her place
She smiled—
With her lips of poppy-red.
'Neath the moon the musicians trod,
And with a nod
Of her queenly head—
They played . . .
Rippling melody—
Marv'lous fantasy—
The fairies swayed . . .
And danced to the lilting time,
And sung in rhyme.

With awe,
I gazed at the beauty I saw—
Unintention'ly rustled a vine—
Hist! . . .
List! . . .
And of fairies there wasn't a sign!
They were gone.
I sighed—
Then cried—
Looked about . . .
It was morn!

Friends

We have our friends who are far away,
And yet they feel so near,
For there's that bond of friendship
That holds them close and dear.

There are our friends who every day
Are so cheerful, gay and bright,
And we enjoy their company through the day
And dream of them at night.

It is our friends, our own dear friends,
Who make the world so bright and gay;
It is our own dear friends
Who chase the blues away.

I would not trade a single friend
For all the wealth on earth,
Because I know my very own pal
Is of much more, much more worth.

My pals, my friends and comrades true
Who all know sympathy and tenderness,
It is you, my very own,
Whom I will always bless.

That Football Game

The football team of Darnay High School had won every game of the season so far and were now preparing for the great game which was to determine their championship. Although every boy on the team worked with great ardor it was due mostly to the brilliant playing of Dan Rogers, the Darnay quarter back, that the team had conquered often. As in most high schools, a certain percent is required each month, in like manner studies were arranged at Darnay. The monthly percent required was 80.

The final game was to be played on Friday and the percents were not to be read out until Thursday. The players objected very much to this as it did not give them a great opportunity to train a "sub" for their various moves. For they felt positive, as things always run, that some player would have to be dropped. They thought, however, that so long as Dan Rogers played, they were safe and they were almost certain that Dan would not be left out on account of studies.

Thursday morning there was much subdued excitement in the classroom wherever a football player chanced to be. The principal, a man who was much interested in athletics, came into the Fourth Year classroom, looking very grave and anxious.

He addressed the class and called out every name until he came to Dan Rogers' and then he paused. "Dan Rogers, for the month of November, has a per cent of 78, and is therefore barred from athletics until next month." There was a deathlike silence and then a general rustle of protest and mutterings about the game the next day. Mr. Reynolds told Dan to go to his office and await him, which Dan did. Then the principal told the quarter back that his Latin was the weak spot and the only way Dan could play the next day would be to take a Latin test at 12 o'clock and have Mr. O'Donnell to correct it as soon as possible. Dan took the principal's kind offer and went home and zealously studied his Latin.

The next day Dan took a rather difficult, but fair test, and at 1 o'clock Mr. O'Donnell took Dan's paper to correct. At 2 o'clock the game started and no Dan appeared and so the substitute for Dan was put in and Waverly High School made a touchdown. The players of Darnay seemed absolutely lost without their real quarter back. It was the last quarter, with the score 6 to 0, in favor of the opponents when Dan appeared on the field. Such shouting would not be heard if the President were to appear! There was just 5 minutes to go and Dan had the ball. Running at top speed he made the touchdown and the extra point. The game was over with a score of 7 to 6 in favor of Darnay. Such a football game!

The Pets' Corner

DING-HOW OF HYDEGREE.
(Mascot of The Junior Post.)

BOW, WOW, WOW! I am as mad as I can be. The little boy down the street says that he does not believe that I write my own stories. The very idea! Never have I been so insulted before. He says furthermore that he does not believe that I can use a typewriter. I wish he could see me using this one right now. I am going to have my picture taken at once to prove to him how I can write on a typewriter. I have been putting it off until all my winter fur grew in, but I can not wait any longer now.

I told that little boy how wicked it was to talk about his neighbors in that way. He laughed and said he could not understand what I was saying. He does not know the bow wow wow language.

I was much pleased at Miss Wire Haired Terrier. She broke into our talk and told that little boy some truths. "Yip, yip, yip," she barked, "you are a rude little boy and do not understand people who speak politely to you.

"Growl, growl, growl!" put in Johnny Bull Dog, "I have something to say, too. Mr. Ding-How is an editor. I have seen his typewriter and him writing on it. If you had any eyes you could see his glasses and know that he is an editor."

The little boy only laughed and jumped around. When Johnny Bull Dog went up to him he ran up on his front porch and into his front door.

The police little girl came along just then and I told her all about it. She said I was not to mind and she gave me some nice candy. Perhaps it was not right for an editor to eat on the street, but I had to be polite to such a little lady. She said her mother said the little boy had no "imagination." That is a long word. I know about it because I am an editor. But it means that the little boy only believes the things he can actually see for himself. How stupid to live in the world that way!

I am sending lots of letters to Santa Claus for the boys and girls who read my corner. If you want me to send one for you, write it to me and address it to "Ding-How, Pets Corner, Washington Post, Washington, D. C." I shall ask Santa Claus to leave a big bag of toys at my office so I can give them to the boys and girls who call on me there at Christmas time.

Such a nice lady is staying at our house. She is never too busy to go on a walk with me and she never eats all of her dinner herself. I think her name and picture should go into the Hall of Politeness I am going to start in the Pets' Corner.

I met my old friend, Halloween Cat, last week for the first time in a year. She told me that the witch who rides on a broomstick had asked her to take a ride to the moon with her. I went along and we had a fine time, flying right over the housetops.

Mr. and Mrs. Halloween Owl were in town, too, and they went to so many parties Halloween they had to stay up all night long. They look wiser than they really are, somehow.

Hop Toy flew up from the country in a pumpkin airship. He tried to find out how wise the Owl family are. Hop Toy is not always polite. I like him, but he should learn to be more polite.

Good-by until next week. Here comes the maid with my supper.

The Story of My Life

I can just remember playing in an old basket when I was very small with my four brothers and sisters. My mother, who always stayed close by us, would make herself comfortable at the other end of the basket and watch her five fat, roly-poly baby puppies roll and tom over each other in their play. My father was very proud of his three sons and two daughters and would strut up and down in front of our basket guarding us.

One day a lady came to see our master and mistress. She was shown the family of puppies and asked if she wanted one. Said my mistress, "We can not keep seven dogs so we will have to get rid of them. Would you like to have one of the puppies?"

The lady replied that she would be delighted and stooped over and looked at all of us. Then she said that she would like to have me. I was given a little while to bid good-by to my brothers and sisters, mother and father and taken off to my new home.

My new mistress, when she arrived at her own door, opened it and took me inside. She called her little girl and asked her to guess what she had for her in the basket she was carrying. The child guessed ever so many things, but none of them were right. So her mother opened the basket and the girl saw me. She picked me up and thanked her mother, hugging me 'till I thought she would hug my breath away. Then she put me down to pet me, asking while she did so, "What kind of a puppy is it? I think he is awfully cute." "He is a Pekingese, Mary," was the answer. "I hope you will like him. What would you like to be his name." "I want to call him 'Fluff,'" said the little girl, so I was named Fluff.

Then I was taken in the kitchen and given some milk. I liked my new home already.

When I had lived with these people about a month they bought a tiny kitten which they named Puff. We became friends very soon although I don't usually like cats. We played together and had splendid times, but since she has grown older she seems to be proud of her gray and white fur and does nothing but sit around and wash her face and paws.

The other day as she was washing her face after dinner I asked her to come and play with me. She curtly replied that she didn't want to and that she felt like washing her face and not playing, anyway. I was disgusted and went outside and started to give vent to my feelings. Puff never would play with me any more. I yelped and barked for about fifteen minutes and nearly got hit by a shower of stones that a bad boy threw at me to make me be quiet. Angrier than ever, I marched into the house to see if Miss Puff was finished washing and to see if she would play with me then.

I went in the door and there sat my friend still washing her face. I had a sudden idea. She hadn't seen me and her back was turned the other way so I could crawl up behind her and take her tail in my mouth and run. When Puff was in a good humor she would usually play with me if I did this. But when I tried to work out my lovely plan I received a good many scratches on my poor nose. My little nose that I took so much pride in. I just sat there with a surprised look on my face while my mistress laughed 'til tears rolled down her cheeks. While I was sitting there not knowing what to do, that cat gave me three or four more scratches. How I did run then!

That was the worst day I ever had in my life. I spilled my breakfast all over the floor. Puff ate most of my lunch when I wasn't looking, a boy threw stones at me and to end with I got about a dozen scratches on my beautiful nose from that cat!

My nose has been sore for about a week, but Miss Puff came over to me yesterday and we made friends again. She even said she was sorry. I do like her in spite of the way she can scratch.

Peace has been declared now with every one. Miss Puff and I are friends once more and I hope all the dogs in the world are as happy as I am.

Buddy

Buddy is a laughing lad,
Strong and straight and true.
He is a happy boy
And has joy enough for two.

Buddy walks an even pace,
Shouldering with the throng;
If you ever want to tell a secret
He is sure to be along.

Buddy is always gay;
Buddy is never sad;
If you ever want to be cheered
Just call on this merry lad.

Dear Editor: My, hasn't it been long since I wrote you? I have been giving myself quite a scolding for not doing so before, but one way or the other I got away from doing so.

Well, at last I have got myself to do it and am sending in a poem, which I hope is printed.

Three cheers for our Junior Post.

Dear Editor: Dad buys the Sunday Post every Sunday. It really would not be Sunday if we did not have The Junior Post. It would not be interesting if there were not any drawings and articles written by children. The puzzles are the most fun. I hope my drawings will be published. Your true lover of our paper. CARL KEYSER.

1777 Lanier place northwest.

Dear Editor: My very best Halloween wishes! Well, I am inclosing a little poem called "Friends," and I hope to see it in our little paper. My brother was very glad to see his drawing in and he is going to send in more.

I am very sorry I did not get a chance to try for Navy Day prizes, but I did not get time to write anything. We must work hard to keep up with our lessons and we get very little spare time. However, our efforts have been rewarded because Estelle Ruths and I were on the honor roll and we were very happy to get on it. With my very best wishes for our paper's success, I remain a loyal member,

Let's All Try to Smile

Smiles are the least trouble
Of anything I know.
We can smile and shed sunshine
Most anywhere we go.

Sometimes we may feel worried,
And sometimes we may feel sad,
But if we'd all try to smile
It would make us all feel glad.

So let's try to smile
Our way on through life.
We'll soon forget our troubles
And many years of strife.

Circle of Adams School Gives Knighthood Play

Splendid Clothes And Fine Acting Shown by Pupils

Young Players Are Much Applauded; Bearers of Posters Cheered.

Tuesday was a gala day at the John Quincy Adams School when the Sir Gareth Circle of the Knighthood of Youth made up of pupils from the 5-A-B grade gave a play "A Day Spent With King Arthur and His Knights."

The play was given at the assembly of the school and the young actors were much applauded. Splendid costumes had been made by the members of the cast assisted by their mothers and big sisters and the whole scene was like a page out of the book of yesterday. The play had been recast by Miss E. Kent, teacher of the grade, who is so interested in Knighthood of Youth and does not intend to stop working for it now she has obtained a 100 per cent membership. She was assisted in this by Hugh Reminger. The helmets were designed by Palmer Derby and the armor was the work of Arthur Page.

It was nearly as much fun making the costumes, the helmets and the armor as it was giving the play. The Junior Post editor hopes that other circles in Washington schools will give knighthood plays. Through the courtesy of the National Child Welfare Association from time to time plays will be printed in The Junior Post which have been written for this purpose.

The cast of players was as follows: King Arthur, Hugh Reminger; St. George, Louis Kornhauser; Sir Galahad, Palmer Derby; the princess, Trinetta Fox; the maiden, Betty Jones; the mother, Marguerite Welsh; the little boy, Kenneth Wilson; his chum, Lawrence Eason; the messenger, Stanley Kind and Sir Percival, Arthur Page.

The knights who appeared in the play were Raymond Darden, Edward Scalm, Edward Sheridan and Earle Chapple. The pages were Thomas Morris and Dominic Antonelli.

After the play was given, members of the Knighthood of Youth carried Knighthood posters to the stage, each child reciting a verse about this Nation-wide club for boys and girls and its aim. Among these poster bearers who were loudly cheered as they crossed the stage were Mary Frances Walker, who carried a poster drawn by Louis Kornhauser; Emily Crawford, who carried a poster which was the work of Palmer Derby; Alice Price carried Hugh Reminger's poster and Marian Thompson bore one which had been given to the play by a friend.

The Sir Gareth Circle holds a weekly meeting every Friday afternoon and it is conducted entirely by the boy and girl officers of the group. Miss Kent, the teacher and organizer, also organized the fine Sir Galahad Circle at the Henry School, where she was a teacher last year.

Junior artists, we need more Knighthood pictures. Remember, there is a $1 prize for such pictures. So get busy with your nice black ink and good paper or drawing board and make pictures for this page. You need not be a member of a Knighthood or Youth to do this, for some of our junior artists are past 12 years of age.

Now and then we get a letter asking when we are going to have motion pictures again for the Knighthood of Youth. Very shortly, if all our plans go well. We can only show pictures, of course, which would be interesting for boys and girls to see and not all the motion picture producers make pictures of this nature. But watch The Junior Post carefully and some day you will see the announcement, telling you where and when to come for your motion picture tickets.

The next step in knighthood for our Knights Bannerets is the rank of Knight Constant. There is a real lesson in that name. Sometimes we can do the fine things which win us the title of "Knight," but to keep on doing fine things is a real test. So do not tire of your quest.

If the knights of old had tired of their quests they would never have won them and had their names written in history for the great things which they did.

Please do not forget to send in the reports of the Knighthood Circles. We are willing to give space each week to reports of what the several groups are doing. It is not only a pleasure to do this, but the printing of your good times in Knighthood will bring other groups into our magic circle of fun.

December 15 is our first birthday. Have you brought in your recruit to knighthood yet, who will help us reach our total of 4,600 members by that night? If not, cut out the recruiting blank in The Junior Post today and sign up your recruit. Remember the rules. The boy or girl must be between the ages of 6 and 12 years and send with the blank, 5 cents for the page button and brightly colored reminder card.

Won't it be fun to count off the 4,600 on December 15? It will be for you, if you have done your bit to reach that goal.

Cat Looks at King And Crash Follows

Disaster From Monarch's Temper Effects Cure of His Pride.

Dick Whittington stepped out of his monoplane. His friend's low-flying biplane circled overhead.

"Can I see the King?" Dick asked.

The Court Poet looked doubtful. "As you were thrice Lord Mayor of London, you might, but—you mustn't look at King Huff."

"Why ever not?" cried Dick.

The Poet told him in Rhyme.

"Oh Huff in his velvet and lace,
Is the haughtiest king of his race,
His head lifted high and his face
Unseen by the court and the crowd,
Because it isn't allowed."

"Has he got a stiff neck?" inquired Dick.

"He has not. It's sheer pride and bad temper. Only don't tell him I said so."

"How can I tell him anything without looking at him?"

"You will be blindfolded," the Poet told him. "The courtiers are not. They fall flat on the floor:

In ones, in twos and threes,
On hands and noses and knees.

The Poet led him, blindfolded, into the throne room and hurried out again.

"What's up now?" he asked the Court in the corridor.

"Oh, why does his Majesty roar?
He's dashing his crown on the floor.
"Shall we go in?"

But the Court appeared frightened.

Crash! Bang!

They fled from the palace instead, the Poet exclaiming:

"His scepter and spectacles shot
Through the window, they broke such a lot.
Oh, what is the matter? What? What?

Dick Whittington came out and told him what was what. And the Poet wailed:

"A truly terrible thing,
Dick's cat has looked at the King!"

And there was Dick Whittington's darling ginger pussy peeping out of Dick's pocket! The Court people fell flat on their faces in horror.

Whiz! His Majesty's portable gramophone crashed out of the throne room window and struck the low-flying biplane, which burst into flames, fell on the roof and burnt the palace to ashes.

Dick was most indignant. He rescued his friend the airman and led the King out of the ashes by his ear.

"Look what you've done," he shouted. "That was sheer bad temper."

It was, and it humbled Huff. He felt so ashamed that he was never proud again. He built a new biplane and a new palace, and even passed a law that a cat can look at a King.

And so it can!

KNIGHTS OF TODAY

A Serial Story for The Knighthood of Youth

"ANNE can not go chestnut hunting with us," said Nancy sadly as the girls gathered at Lenore's house to wait for the boys of the George Washington Circle who were going with them.

"Why not?" asked Lenore, "I do wish she would not feel so badly about Sam."

"That is not all the reason," answered Jenny. "Sam feels so badly himself and is working hard while he is suspended from school on his lessons and a story he is writing. Anne is trying to help him, you know. With his lessons, not with the story. He will not let any one see it. He wants the teacher to read it to the class just as she read out the copied story. And then the Valiant Lady can not come with us because she is needed at the Navy Department just now."

"It will not be the same," mourned little Lillian, "without the Valiant Lady and Anne. They were the ones who thought of going on this nutting party."

"I have an idea," shouted Nancy in her excitement, "let's not go on the party today, just hold a meeting. Perhaps next week they could go with us. Sam will be back in school then and Anne will feel better and the Valiant Lady may be able to get away."

"The boys will insist on it," said Lenore, doubtfully. Jack had been talking all day about the party.

"Let them go by themselves, then," said Nancy, "it was a boy who disgraced the circle and made Anne feel so badly."

"Oh, but Sam feels so very badly. I don't think we should speak like that of him," said Jenny, "he will never do that again. Besides—it was John Brown who really copied. Sam did not know the story was copied. Johnny wanted Sam to be able to play the football game against the Scarlet Imps, he is such a good end. It was Johnny who copied it. Sam should have told the teacher."

"Told the teacher what?" Bill, Bob and Jack had come up to hear Jenny's last remark, and Bob asked the question.

"Oh about——," Jenny hesitated and blushed. Perhaps she should not have been talking so freely.

"If you mean about copying the story out a book for Sam," said Bob. "Well, Johnny did, and he asked to be suspended, too."

"Was he?" the girl demanded in a breath.

"Oh, yes," said Bill, "and, of course, we can't play the Red Dragons this week. We have named the team after our school and the teacher said Johnny could not play football in the name of the school for a week."

"Well," asked little Lillian, "does that make it better for Sam?"

"Hardly," said Bill quickly, "you see he cheated anyway. Are you girls ready to start?"

"We thought——," said Nancy, "that since the Valiant Lady and Anne and Sam are not going this week we might put it off until next week."

"O. K. with me," said Bill.

"But what will we do with the food?" asked Bob, eyeing the lunch boxes.

"Let's go in the summer house and eat it," said Jack.

"I tell you what," said Nancy, "let's go and start a fire in the Valiant Lady's back yard; you know, the fireplace she built for picnics there. We can roast the frankfurters and make the cocoa and toast the marshmallows there just as good as in the woods, and then Anne will have to come out——"

"Will that be all right?" asked Lenore. "She said she wanted to be alone."

"We can make her feel better, I am sure, and then the Valiant Lady can have some when she comes home. It is almost 3 now anyway, and she will be back in an hour and a half from the department."

"Sam will feel badly because he is not invited to a party in his own back yard," said little Lillian.

"Can't we invite Sam?" said Jenny.

"Of course we can," said Nancy and Lenore in a breath.

"Will he come?" insisted Lillian, with whom Sam was a great favorite.

"We will make him if we have to drag him out," said Bob.

"I don't see why he should not play with us," said Bill. "He is not suspended from us."

"I do think," said Lenore, "he has been punished a lot. Anne said he just went wild when the Valiant Lady cried and said she was so disappointed in him. I know he has learned a lesson."

"He is studying so hard," said Jenny, "I guess he will never fail in his lessons again, and you know how Sam does hate school."

"He does have a hard time," said Bill, "but we all do. I guess anything as valuable as an education takes lots of hard work."

"But think of the reward," said Nancy.

"Oh yes!" said her twin, Bob, shaking his red head at her red head, "it is easy for girls. They do not have to play baseball, football and other things."

"Nobody makes you, either," said Nancy, "but we have things to do, too. We are just naturally smarter than boys."

"Oh, oh, listen to what we think of ourselves!" jeered Bob.

"Well, are we going to give Sam and Anne a surprise party or stand here all day?" asked Jack.

"On to the Valiant Lady's back yard," said Bill.

Directions Given For Pretty Shade

New Beauty Is Given to Dressing Table From Lighted Bulb.

One of the nicest shades you could ask for to put over your dressing table lamp is a simple affair which takes on new beauty surrounding a lighted bulb, and it can be made in a few moments and with materials already on hand.

First, get a piece of scrap cretonne, preferably nicely figured in colors. From this cut a strip 6 or 7 inches wide and about 10 inches long. Get a piece of white muslin and cut to within ½ inch of the same dimensions. Dilute some best quality liquid glue with an equal part of warm water and mix it thoroughly. With the right side down brush the glue over the back of the cretonne, taking care not to soak the cloth. Then lay the muslin, carefully centered to leave a uniform lap all the way around, upon this and press lightly with a hot iron. Apply undiluted glue to the laps of the cretonne, fold these over and press down.

While the glue is still moist, shape this strip to form a cylinder and stitch the seam together. This seam should, of course, occur on the back side when the shade is in use. From some stiff cardboard, cut out a circle which will fit this shade rather tightly. In the center cut a hole just large enough to put the end of the light bulb through. Then work the disk into position near the shade top. To use, insert the bulb, then screw it into its socket.

When the light is on the shade will let part of the light through and the pattern on the cloth will stand out clearly and with surprising beauty.

My Summer Vacation

My enjoyable vacation was spent this summer in Washington, D. C. I had one month to stay; wasn't so long, was it?

Early one morning about 7 o'clock my aunt came after me. We had a fine drive down, as we went in our car. We arrived about 8:30 a. m., as we drove fast. The first two or three days I was lonesome, although my aunt tried to entertain me.

Then I had a good time and forgot to be lonesome.

Obedience Called Prime Attribute Of Every Knight

Those Who Would Command Must First Learn to Obey.

Have I obeyed my parents and teachers today?

That is a question which every member of the Knighthood of Youth should keep on his or her reminder card whether of the rank of page, esquire, knight, or those proud persons, knights banneret.

There is a saying in the United States Navy that he who would command, must first learn to obey. Unless you have learned how to obey yourself, you can not expect others, when you grow up, to obey you.

The National Child Welfare Association, parent organization of the Knighthood of Youth, in an attractive poster, prints a picture of a little Chinese girl. Now China is a land where the people have been taught to obey rightful laws. This little Chinese girl, so neat and pretty in her yellow silk dress, her black hair done up prettily with a red rose stuck in it, is called Cherry-Bloom.

What Cherry-Bloom Says.

Here is what she is supposed to be saying:

"In China, says Miss Cherry-Bloom,
When I am at my play,
If mother says, 'Come help me, please,'
I do it right away.
We Chinese love our parents so
We couldn't disobey."

Do you always go quickly when your mother calls to you? Unless you do, you have not learned the art of obeying at once. When Mother calls to you, there is always some reason why she wants you to come to her. So, do not lag or keep her waiting.

Another thing, when Mother says you must not do this or that, it is very wrong to disobey her and do it when you are away from her. It is unfair, too, for she trusts you now that you are no longer a baby and have to stay by her side.

Knights Must Be Strong.

I know some times it is hard to refuse friends who urge you to go with them on some lark. But if you have promised Mother, you must "quit yourself like a man" and be strong. Courage such as possessed by the knights of old whose example we are trying to instill in the Knighthood of Youth, gave them strength to follow conscience, while being a coward tempts you to follow the crowd.

To obey your teacher promptly is only a small return for the splendid service she gives you day by day in the classroom. Think how patient she is, how much information she gives you to pack away in the storehouse of your mind, ready for use later on when you need it in your way through the world.

Good Knights of Youth know how to obey. Therefore they can be trusted to lead other boys and girls.

A Breakdown on Road.

Just as my two girl friends, Jane and Elsie Lindsey, and I had gone about a mile on one of the country roads that was seldom used our car suddenly stopped.

Jane, our chauffeur, emerged from the car to see if she could locate the trouble, as she was the only one that knew anything about a car. In a few minutes she returned with a troubled expression on her face, by which we knew that she couldn't find any trouble. So there we were, stranded on a lonely road 15 miles from the city not knowing what to do.

But just then I looked up to see a light about a mile off. I called the attention of Jane and Elsie, which proved to be useful. We decided on Jane and Elsie going to see where the light came from and that I was to stay there with the car.

The first fifteen minutes did not seem so boring and long. But as the night began to become darker, colder, and damper, I became very uncomfortable. Then I began to imagine many strange things. The road was narrow, lonely, and surrounded by trees on either side. Soon I became aware of a light coming toward me.

I became more frightened than ever. I thought it was about 10 o'clock, but when I looked at my watch it was only 9. But these fifteen minutes surely seemed like an hour. My hands were cold, and I couldn't keep them still. I had climbed into the back seat of the car and was crouched down as low as I could possibly get. I was afraid to breathe for fear that I would be heard by the one carrying the light. One minute I was cold and the next I was hot. I thought that if I had to stay and listen to the hooting of the owls, the creaking of the leaves and sprigs, and the uncomfortable feeling and position that I was in for fifteen more minutes I would not be able to stand it.

Just then the light was beside the car, and I heard the voices of Jane, Elsie, and that of a man. The man was carrying the light and a can. I saw him go to the rear of the car, and I knew that we had run out of gas, also remembering that we only had 2 gallons when we left the city.

I was much relieved, and as we were going home I told them just how I had felt while they were gone.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"Stars over snow,
And in the West a planet
Swinging below a star—
Look for a lovely thing and you will find it.
It is not far—
It will never be far."

"Hush, children, listen to the sweet singing. It sounds like our fairy friends," said the Story Book Lady, halting with the members of the Knighthood of Youth, the Junior Post Writers Clubs and the George Washington Junior Citizens on the end of the bridge leading to Story Book Land.

"Oh-h—It is!" shouted little Lillian gleefully, "there they are sitting on that fern. Look, the Story Book Fairy in her lily airplane, Fairies, Merry and Jolly. See the Story Book Fairy has a harp of solid gold and diamonds, and Merry and Jolly are playing tunes on Lily of the Valley pipes."

"They are," said the Story Book Lady, as excitedly as the children, "I wonder where they found Lily of the Valley at this time of the year."

"Ha ha ha! Ho ho ho!" laughed Merry and John together, "not even the Story Book Lady knows that flowers grow all the time in Fairyland."

"What is that you were singing? It was so beautiful," asked Margaret.

"I thought all of you would like it," said the Story Book Fairy, alighting from her lily airplane and leaving it parked on top of the fern while she used the fronds for steps to come down to the ground." It is "Night" from "Stars Tonight," a book of verses, new and old, for boys and girls, which my friend, Sara Teasdale, has written and the MacMillan Co., New York, has published.

"And don't forget the illustrations by Dorothy P. Lathrop," exclaimed Merry and Jolly.

"She came to fairyland to get her ideas," said Merry. "Ha ha ha! We did have such a good time with her."

"Well," said the Story Book Lady, "this is all delightful. I know Sara Teasdale, too, and a book by her is a real literary event. She always loved the stars, and fairies, too."

"Oh," said Anne, "I do want to get this book and go off by myself and read it."

"No, you don't," said Merry and Jolly, "We will be there and our cousins, the stars, will watch you."

"Oh, what lovely pictures and what a lovely looking boy, and see that bright and shining circle about his head," said Anne, in an awe-struck tone; "It is the boy, Jesus, is it not Dear Story Book Lady?"

"Yes," said the Story Book Lady, "and how nice to have such a book just when we are thinking about Christmas — or beginning to think about it."

"It is verses, too," said Anne.

"Yes, by Lucy Diamond, who has written this book in simple and original verses under the title of 'When He Was Just a Little Child' (Oxford University Press, New York). And the lovely pictures are by Constance Grant."

"I wish I hade a bear like that one," said Little Tommy gazing at a Teddy Bear sitting up and pointing his finger.

"Well, you can," said Alice indulgently. "Can't he, Dear Story Book Lady?"

"Of course," said the Story Book Lady, "for this book has all our familiar friends in it—pooh, and Eeyore and Piglet and Christopher Robin himself."

"Not a book," said Merry and Jolly, "excuse us, please. Ha ha ha and Ho ho ho, but we have been investigating and they are just paper cardboard cut-outs which all good children like us can get from H. H. Ward, promotion manager of E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

"Well anyway," said the Story Book Lady, "this is a book we are coming to now. 'Let's See; Spinach Boy,' written and illustrated by Lois Lenski (Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York). Just look here Tommy. A little boy like yourself who likes spinach. It is printed in green ink, see how pretty it is."

"I don't like spinach," said Tommy. "So your mother tells me," agreed the Story Book Lady, "but it is so good for you. Read this book and then you will."

"I guess I will," said Tommy, "the book looks good."

"Here is something great," Bob shouted as he ran back from around the corner to call his companions. "It is called Island Treasure or is it called 'Green Island,' but it is all about a treasure on an island."

"So it is" said the Story Book Lady pulling her glasses out of her fur cuffs where Merry and Jolly had put them, "and it is written by George Biddle, who certainly knows how to write about treasure and he certainly knows how to draw too. Just look at these pictures children. Coward-McCann, New York, has published it for us."

"I am going to put it down on my Christmas list the instant I get home," said Jack.

"So am I," said Bill and the other boys and good many girls said they were as well.

"Where are the Story Book Fairy, Merry and Jolly going in the Fairy Lily Airplane?" asked Susan. "They seem to be so delighted with something. Here they are flying back to tell us."

"More poetry, more poetry," said Merry and Jolly with a Ha ha ha and Ho ho ho. "Just the kind fairies like."

"And little and big children, too," said the Story Book Fairy.

"Well, it certainly has a lovely name," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her glasses and gazing into the book. "'Early Moon,' and let me see; why, Carl Sandburg has written it, especially for children, and Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York, has certainly made an attractive book of it."

"Don't forget the drawings of James Daugherty," said the Story Book Fairy. "Between his drawing and the short talk on poetry by Mr. Candburg, these children may become poetic enough to be invited to Fairyland."

"Oh, when can we come?" they all asked in a breath.

"Some day, some day," said the Story Book Fairy as she started her propeller and the lily airplane disappeared with Merry and Jolly laughing merrily and dancing a fairy dance on the wings.

Frank's Reward.

Once upon a time Frank was walking down the street, he saw something that was shining in the sun, he ran over to see what it was and found to his surprise that it was a real diamond.

He ran home to his mother and showed her what a great find he had. They both looked into the morning Post and saw much to their surprise that there was a reward of $100 for the diamond. They cut the name and address out of the paper and Frank hurried as fast as he could to the place, rang the bell and a kind old lady answered his ring. She was so surprised that a little boy had found it, that she added $5 more for the reward after asking Frank about his family.

Frank hurried home and told his mother the good news, and they all went down town and bought some nice warm winter clothes with the money.

Under the Sea.

'Neath the foaming, dashing waters of the deep, relentless sea
Lie many strange and lovely things unknown to you and me.
I'm sure we'd stare to see the wealth of golden treasure there
The swordfish slim and sea wolves grim and sharks within their lair.
These great galleons of old were sunk by pirates grim
Among them swim the phantom fish, without and then within.
The green and purple water flows and ebbs above all these
All undisturbed are those below unmoved by upper breeze.
And still to them come many ships to join them in the deep
Where many a valiant sailor lies in his eternal sleep.
Now I have never seen these things I blithely tell in song
But I have looked them up in books (it took me rather long).

Yellowstone Park Facts.

Punch Bowl spring is elevated about a foot from the ground. It is brightly colored and is full of blue bubbling water. It resembles a punch bowl very much.

Pulpit and Jupiter terraces exemplify the shelf type of formations deposited by the lime laden water issuing from the large hot springs on top of the mound.

Grotto geyser is a prominent and very unusual formation of silicious material known as geyserite, of which all the geyser cones and craters of Old Faithful are formed. The Grotto is an active geyser which plays about 30 feet and from two to eight hours.

A Fish Tale

"My, but the sun is warm here! One of my favorite pastimes is sunning myself on the edge of the lily pool.

I will have to introduce myself, Ding How, as I have never written to you before. I am a large goldfish, very large, in fact, and many times a great grandfather. Two other fish and myself inhabited this lily pool five years ago. Then we were but small fish. Now we are more than 6 inches long.

Miss Peacock, as we call her, is very proud of her beautiful fan tail. If it were mine I would be proud, too, but she puts on entirely too many airs. There she goes now, swish, swish.

Another of my favorite amusements is to play tag among the lily pads and stems. Of course, the small fish play it more than we do, but still I get a lot of exercise from it.

Here comes that silly, old grasshopper again. I warned him yesterday that if he ever fell into this pool again he would be a "goner." By the way, I am passionately fond of fresh grasshoppers, so you see I can not resist the temptation much longer. Gulp, my but he was good!

Great whales and little minnows, school is out and I'm afraid I'll have to stop writing. Small fishes are so frisky that they are apt to swish my ink over. KING FISH.

Post Airship

Nation at Ballot Seen From the Air In Flying Machine

President's Son Observed Getting Better in His Carolina Home.

"Have you voted yet?" asked the Current Events editor as he climbed into the cockpit beside the pilot. "I got up early to cast my vote for the best man."

"No; I have no vote," said the pilot. "I live in the District of Columbia."

"Too bad, old man," said the editor, looking at the rueful face of the usually good-natured pilot. "We'll fly over Maryland and Virginia, and we will show you how it is done."

"Well, why pick on Maryland and Virginia," asked the pilot; "why not any State. They can all vote."

"Well, they are nearby," laughed the editor, "and you will see many people who do business in the District of Columbia casting their votes in Maryland and Virginia because they have their homes over the District line."

Sure enough, there they were, all headed for the polling places, men and women, with the children often waiting outside.

"Looks like a record vote," said the pilot.

"What a serious-looking little girl—that is, she looks serious now," exclaimed the pilot as they soared over Mount Pleasant Branch of the Public Library.

"Well, she can play as hard as any child—I know that little girl," said the editor, "but this is a serious occasion for her. She is receiving the first prize for reading the Bible from Genesis to Revelation during her summer vacation. This prize, I read in The Post this morning, is given by the National and International Community Bible Readers League."

"The other little girl who looks just like her seems so interested," said the pilot.

"Yes, that must be her twin sister, Eileen, forced from the race, by illness I hear. Just to think doing all that when you are only eleven," the editor said admiringly.

"Where do we go from here?" shouted the pilot as he flew over the field where the boys of the St. Alban's National Cathedral School for Boys were practicing football.

"Head toward Asheville, will you?" the editor asked. "I want to see for myself just how Herbert Hoover, jr., is doing in the bracing air near his mountain cabin."

"It is too bad the President and Mrs. Hoover, who have so much to think about in their important positions should have such a serious worry. Herbert, jr., is a fine young man and likes aviation," said the pilot, as though airmindedness was the most important quality in a young man.

"So I hear," agreed the editor, "but he will get well in this fine air. I feel it now and there is Mr. Hoover himself out for a walk looking very fit from here."

Much relieved at the good news about the President's son, the pilot made two or three dips in salute and headed off over the mountains for the preview of the grand show for Talented Animals to be held in New York, November 18 and 22. The editor had to laugh at the boasts of his pilot on the tricks his own dog, Aviatrix, could do in the air and on the ground. Of course, Madison Square Garden was not open for the show, but they got the addresses of some of the educated animals and took a look at them.

"We will come back when the show is ready," said the pilot.

On the plane went up the Hudson River, and over the lake country to Chicago where signs that an election was taking place were noticed.

"That is Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin holding that dog for the doctor. See, he is tying a bandage on it,' said the editor.

"I thought she was a dancer and not a dog nurse," said the pilot.

"There you are wrong, my boy," said the editor. "She has opened a home for dogs in Chicago, Orphans of the Storm she calls it. And she works there herself."

"I wish we could see the new boy flier," said the pilot, "I hear he is a prize."

"Well, he won a prize, anyway," said the editor, thinking that his grownup boy pilot was a prize himself. "Let us fly down Los Angeles way and see if we can spot him."

On they went until they really did meet a plane with a boyish pilot grinning at them.

"There he is," said the pilot, excitedly looping the loop about the boy's plane.

"Wait, I must get that down in our log book for The Junior Post readers," shouted the editor, "keep right side up for a minute will you? Let's see, 'Met Stanley Boynton, boy flier, up in the clouds. He set a new mark in East-West crossing in 24 hours and 2 minutes for the trip from coast to coast. Hurrah for Stanley.'"

"I forgot to say that was Bert Balchen, who flew over the South Pole with Admiral Byrd, and his bride, the former Miss Emmy Soerlie, we saw near the Peterboro airport back in Jersey."

"Do you think we might take a hop over to Germany to see the new lightning express driven by a 400-power airplane engine with propeller running on a track—a dirigible on the railroad," asked the pilot.

"You sound like you are trying to sell me one," the editor said with a laugh, "but I want to see it too. I also want to see how the new young Queen of Bulgaria is getting on. I have been thinking about her crying at her wedding last week."

"Just look down there in Pasadena. That is Miss Leona Nott with the new President Hoover roses at the Southern California Flower Show in Pasadena, one of the boys wirelessed me about them," yelled back the pilot.

On and on they sped, back over the continent heading for the Atlantic Ocean and far off Germany and Bulgaria, determined to make them and return before landing at the flying field in Washington for the night.

"There is the young queen. She looks like any other pretty happy young girl. And see how the Bulgarians seem to like her. Hear them hail their new girl queen."

"Well, I am glad she has stopped crying," said the pilot.

Daniel Webster's Power of Oratory Made Him Knight

Famous Debater Always Lent His Support to Cause of Right.

All the knights did not live in the Old World. There were knights in America in the early days of this country and there are some today as well. Daniel Webster was a great knight of the nineteenth century. He discovered a fountain of oratory, which was the gift of making great speeches for the right and leading men into the right through what he would say in those speeches.

When he was a little boy Daniel Webster lived on a farm in New Hampshire. He loved justice and did not want the animals on the farm to be harmed. If he saw anybody hurting a dog or a cat or a cow or a pig he would tell him or her not to do it and give reasons for the protest.

He was rather a delicate little boy. His father had been in the Revolutionary Army with George Washington and little Daniel was never tired of hearing his father tell about those wonderful days. He thought his country needed him and he went to school and college to learn how to tell the people the right way to do things.

Taught School While Young.

He taught school to help earn his way through college. He used to make speeches to his pupils for practice. When he was going to speak none of his students would stay away from school, for all loved to hear him talk and tell all about the wonderful days and men of old.

When he was sent to Congress his powers of speech made other members vote for right things. Often he could change their minds through the wonderful power he had over words.

Then he became a senator, just like senators some of us know today. He went up and up the steep pathway of fame through his orafory, and his stern desire to give justice to all in the Senate until he became Secretary of State.

It was Daniel Webster who said the famous words "Liberty and Union, now and forever." He once made a speech four hours long, in which he said that the Union of the United States must be kept.

Familiar Figure in Capital.

While this great knight of oratory won many honors and climbed high to fame he never quite reached the top. For he wished to be President of the United States. This he never was, but few Presidents have had the "gift of tongue" of Webster.

He was once a very familiar figure around Washington. He used to stop to play with the children in the park we now know as "Lafayette Square," opposite the White House.

One of the reasons Daniel Webster made a success as an orator and statesman was that he was not afraid of hard work. He was also never afraid to say that he did not know certain things and people often told him things for that reason. When a subject came up which he did not know he got a book on the subject and asked many questions of the men and women who knew about the subject so as to learn more about it.

Autumn.

Autumn is the most beautiful part of the year. After summer leaves, the frost turns the leaves many beautiful colors. The leaves begin to fall, and the grass turns brown. All the birds leave the Northern States. On an early fall evening you may see a flock of birds going South, never to return until spring.

During the fall of the year the crops are stored away for winter's use. The corn and wheat are sent to manufacturing cities to be canned and packed in cartons and sent to other cities. Apples and other fruits and vegetables are sent all over the world.

So now you see why autumn is one of the most important seasons.

Rules for Flag Coloring Contest

Rules and regulations for submitting drawings in the "Guess the Flag" contest.

Any boy or girl between the ages of 8 and 18 years may enter this contest.

All drawings must be submitted one week from the Monday following publication of the outline of the flag to be colored.

All drawings must be addressed to The Junior Post Editor, Washington Post, Washington, D. C.

Prizes will be awarded each week in two divisions: One for children under 9 years and one for children over 9.

Announcement of prize winners will be made each Sunday for the contest published two weeks previously. The first prize in each class will be a gold pin and the second prize is to be a book.

Drawings may be colored with either crayons or water colors, and must be in the exact colors of the flag of the country represented in the outline drawing.

Winner of Oct. 26 Contest

The flag was that of Crete and the prize winners were:

First prize—Gold pin, Katharine McCarthy, Wardman Park Hotel.

Second prize—Book, Wilbur May, 214 Third street northeast.

ANOTHER flood of answers to the flag contest descended upon The Junior Post editor last week. This contest appears to appeal to boys and girls alike and it is very welcome for that reason because we want both boys and girls to be interested in the contests of The Junior Post and to take part in them as well. These contests are planned most carefully with the idea that they arouse in the boys and girls who read The Junior Post the desire to excel and to win a place in the column of this interesting little paper.

Two things must be borne in mind in entering this contest. First: That you must color the flags in the proper colors and shades of colors and second: That you must guess correctly the name of the countries to which the flags belong.

Some of the boys and girls who put the colors on the flags correctly give them to other countries and thus spoil their chances to win. The first prizes won in this contest are being mailed to the lucky boys and girls this week. Hereafter the prize winners will receive their prizes the week following the Sunday in which the winning flags were announced on this page of The Junior Post.

Last week we printed the beautiful poem about the flag of Canada. Today we print an equally lovely one about the United States flag. Many boys and girls have learned this poem by heart and recited it in school, and I trust that some of The Post boys and girls will do the same thing and thus add to the store of poetry that they know and can recite at will.

Here is the poem:

When Freedom, from her mountain height,
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there!
She mingled with its gorgeous dyes
The milky baldric of the skies,
And striped its pure celestial white
With streakings of the morning light,
Then, from his mansion in the sun,
She called her eagle-bearer down,
And gave into his mighty hand
The symbol of her chosen land.

Flag of the free heart's hope and home,
By angel hands to valor given!
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,
And all thy hues were born in heaven!
And fixed as yonder orb divine,
That saw thy bannered blaze unfurled,
Shall thy proud stars resplendent shine,
The guard and glory of the world.
Forever float that standard sheet!
Where breathes the foe but falls before us?
With Freedom's soil beneath our feet,
And Freedom's banner streaming o'er us!

The flag we have chosen for today is one of the smaller countries on the continent of Europe. It is a country which has had a long and thrilling history, however. It is within sight of Italy. Living as its people, too, for the most part in mountain villages, they are a sturdy race and as fleet footed as the mountain goats which inhabit the region. Some historians have said that they are the most ancient people in southeastern Europe. Many of the people are Moslems, that is non-Christian, due to a widespread conversion to that faith which took place in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Often held captive by the Turks, this brave country has fought many wars for independence.

The colors of its present flag are oddly combined. The field is of the same as the stripes in the Star-Spangled Banner and the emblem on the flag is curiously enough in the color of night. That makes a very striking flag, and once you have colored it on your Junior Post cut-out you will never forget how it looks.

A Girl Scout Dinner.

I was all excited. Our Scout troop was having a hike, with a dinner afterward. My four personal friends and I couldn't go on the hike because we go to school only in the afternoon. We were going to the dinner, though.

A friend of our scoutmistress came to school after us. We were taken as far as Mrs. Crawford's home in an automobile. We waited at the car tracks for about ten minutes for one more girl. She did not come right away and we grew impatient. One first-class Scout said she would wait and we could go on. So we went (nine in all, because four had come to show where to go). We ran nearly all the way to the place, where we met a blazing campfire. Seated around this were some other girls in a semicircle. We took the other half of the circle when we sat down.

I will name the things we had to eat. They were the following: Two helpings of our special kind of stew, two cups of cocoa apiece, a small dill pickle apiece, two and a half rolls apiece, an apple each and six Hershey kisses each. The only thing wrong was that the bacon between the rolls was not done.

We all had a lovely time, I am sure, and I wish you had been there to help enjoy the food and the spirit of the party. PHYLLIS MOORE (age 11).

The Music Lesson.

On Friday evening Billy hurried home, for he had not practiced that week on his piano lesson. When he reached home he found Betty already playing for Miss Annabelle.

When Billy sat down and started to play, Miss Annabelle stopped him, saying that he had not practiced that week. This meant that Betty would get still further ahead in her music.

Billy said that he would study twice as hard next week, and he did. Every afternoon after school he studied a whole hour. His fingers ached, but he kept on.

When Friday came Billy seated himself at the piano and played through both lessons. Miss Annabelle said that now he would have only one more lesson to make up, and then he would be up with Betty.

Next time Betty played first. She went through her lesson very well. Then Miss Annabelle asked what lesson Billy was on.

"He is on the 'Midnight Waltz,'" said Betty.

"Why, that is the lesson you are on," said Miss Annabelle, in surprise.

"Yes," said Billy coming into the room for his lesson, "Betty helped me every day so that I could catch up with her."

The Cross Word Bird

If you ever solve cross word puzzles you are already familiar with old Mr. Monk's obliging steed, our ancient friend Mr. Emu. To see this bird with the convenient name, take your pencil and draw a straight line from dot to dot in order, starting at No. 1, and ending at No. 47. This will produce a fine picture.

A Cut-Out Zoo

Here is a rhinceros to add to your collection of home-made animals. Simply cut him out carefully along the outside edge, trying not to crease the paper too much. Then fold along the dotted line, when the rhinoceros can be made to stand firmly on his own four legs. Or, if you wish, you can first paste the picture on light cardboard.

Beating the Dutch

By SAM LOYD.

A good story is told of a quick-witted Irishman with an aptitude for arithmetic. He was working in a field with a Dutchman, when they unearthed a box of silver coins. The Dutchman at once laid claim to the entire booty, because he was first to break it open and discover the valuable contents.

"Go softly," said the Irishman, "for the whole business is mine. It is a bit of money left me by an uncle, and I buried it here for safe keeping. There was $1000."

"All right with that," replied the Dutchman, as he caught onto the bait. "If you tell me how much money there is in the box, it's yours; if you miss she's mine."

"That's fair, and you have the instincts of a gentleman," replied Pat, as he made a quick mental calculation from the weight of the box. He correctly guessed that it contained about $50.

"Now take your pencil and paper and follow me," instructed the Irishman. "I sent $642.53 to my mother in the old country, so add that amount to what there is in the box. Then deduct that amount from the $1,000 that was left me. Now deduct that amount from $357.47, which I had to pay the lawyers, and it leaves the exact amount to one cent that you will find in the box."

"That's right to the penny," announced the Dutchman after he had counted it carefully, "and it proves that you are an honest man."

It is not every one that can see at a glance through Pat's mathematical trickery. Can you?

LITTLE STORIES OF GREAT EVENTS

DARING the SEA of DARKNESS

By Ramon Coffman Illustrated by Frank C. Pape

The Indians gaze with wonder as the Pinta sails toward their shores.

THEY are on the Sea of Darkness, the somber ocean which from time immemorial has been a field of dread to the sailors of Europe, which has served as a wall to the westward expansion of the white race.

No one knows haw far the Sea of Darkness extends, but there are stories a-plenty about the dangers which it holds. The waters, 'tis said, abound in terrors. There are monsters, worse than any beast of the land, which could upset a ship without effort.

If a vessel should escape the monsters, should pass the fury of the mountainous waves—even then it would be doomed. For there must be an end to the water, a place where the world (which any simpleton can see is flat!) comes to a halt—and if the ship gets that far, it will simply drop off the edge!

There are 115 sailors—Spaniards for the most part, but including also Portuguese and Italians, along with one Englishman and one Irishman. They are a rough lot, many of them freshly released from prison at Palos on condition that they would enter upon the foolhardy enterprise.

The sailors are sullen. They have seen a long mast floating in the water.

"That mast," they tell one another, "belonged to a vessel far larger than any of our three little ships! If a big ship has been wrecked in these waters, what will happen to us?"

Were the sailors permitted to decide, the ships would be turned around and headed back to Spain; but aboard the Santa Maria is a man with a will of iron. He is the authorized commander of the expedition, and he will listen to no word of retreat.

On this September night, when clouds hide the stars, he is sitting near the pilot. He speaks no word; he is deep in thought.

"What if the others should be right after all!" he wonders. "What if we are bound to utter destruction!"

But in a moment he dismisses the thought. He has accepted the idea of the roundness of the earth, an idea handed down from ancient times in the writings of philosophers, and he will not let his mind wander far in doubting.

"The earth must be round," he mutters to himself, "and if it is round, we can not help but reach the shores of India—rich India, land of spices, silks, and jewels!"

Using the light of a lantern, he examines the compass. Here is an instrument — invented in China and brought into use among European seamen scarcely a century ago—which gives man greater freedom of the sea, which enables him to chart his course even when the North Star can not be seen.

Columbus speaks to the pilot, then walks to his sheltered berth, that he may sleep and be ready for the morrow. Who knows but that the morning will bring the sight of land!

The morning fails to reveal the slightest trace of land. There is water, water, everywhere.

One night the sailors observe that the compass is acting strangely. It no longer points directly toward the North Star! Columbus is inwardly disturbed, but he calms the fears of his men with an explanation which he devises on the spur of the moment.

The days are slowly checked off. One night a flash of fire streaks the sky—a flaming meteor has struck the sea close by the ships. The superstitious sailors wonder what it means. Is it a good omen, or is it a portent of early destruction?

The salt spray lashes the ships. Storms give way to periods of calm. September turns into October. From time to time during the voyage birds have been seen. At first they were thought to be proofs of nearby land; but since the land has not come into sight it appears that the birds did not indicate a continent. Seaweed, too, has been noted on the surface but this "sign of shallow water" has been followed by no view of the firm soil for which every one longs.

Ten days of October pass, and still there is no land. The eleventh day fades into darkness. Columbus paces the deck. Suddenly he calls to one of his companions, "Look! Is that a light "

The man looks. He is not sure. It may be light or it may be imagination.

Columbus retires, but before he has slept long he hears the boom of a cannon. Rushing back to the deck, he finds that the cannon was fired by the Pinta. Land is in sight!

At break of dawn Columbus enters a small boat. Lusty oarsmen, now filled with an overwhelming eagerness, row him toward the shore. Stepping from the boat, he falls on his knees and bends over to kiss the earth. Mother Earth, here you are at last! Here you are, smiling and friendly, on the other side of the Sea of Darkness!

What Are "Pieces of Eight"?

TED had just finished reading "Treasure Island," and he and Bob were playing pirate ship on a pile of playroom chairs.

"Yo ho, me lads, yo ho!" sang Bob. "Come, my hearty mate, and see what I have found." Ted climbed over two unturned chairs and peered at the imaginary find.

"Pirate treasure," he exclaimed, slapping his knee. "On my oath 'tis 'pieces of eight!' "

"What's 'pieces of eight?' " asked May from the forward deck, where she sat bound with a piece of clothes line.

"Don't interrupt our play, silly," objected Bob.

At that moment mother came into the playroom and seeing May's eyes filled with tears she inquired the cause.

"She spoils our game," said Ted.

"Asking foolish questions," explained Bob. "She wanted to know what are 'pieces of eight,' as though any pirate wouldn't know that."

"Do you?" asked mother. Bob and Ted looked at each other sheepishly.

"Not knowing the meaning of 'pieces of eight' is nothing to be ashamed of. I didn't know it myself until I was quite grown up," said mother. "Being unkind to your little sister is a more serious matter. If you want to interrupt your play for a few minutes, I will explain to you all what 'pieces of eight' were and then you can continue your play more intelligently." The two pirates and their bound captive righted a chair for mother and seated themselves on the floor below her while she began her explanation.

"A 'piece of eight' was an old Spanish coin or a piece of money having on it a large figure eight. This coin was the famous old Spanish dollar which was current when pirates and treasure-seekers roved the waters of the Atlantic. It was a large silver coin about the size of our silver dollar and the figure eight on its face meant eight reales. It was the equivalent of eight smaller coins or reales which takes ten dimes or four quarters of our money to make a dollar today. On one side of the old Spanish coin were two pillars called the 'Pillars of Hercules.' These represented the Straits of Gibraltar, which, at the time the coin was designed, were considered to be the end of the world. No land was known beyond the western coast of Spain. Columbus had not discovered America, so when the coin was designed over the 'Pillars of Hercules' were inscribed the words 'Ne Plus Ultra,' which is Latin for 'Nothing More Beyond.' When, later, Christopher Columbus proved that there was something beyond the Straits of Gibraltar the word 'Ne' was removed and the inscription read 'Plus Ultra,' which meant 'More Beyond.' The English sailors who came in contact with these Spanish coins called them 'eight bit pieces' or 'eight bits.' Some who could not remember what the figure eight stood for designated the coins as 'pieces of eight,' and they have come down to us in pirate jargon and sea rovers' lore.

"Now go on with your play, children, and when you find buried 'pieces of eight' you will know what they really are."

Famous Obelisk.

On July 19, 1880, the famous obelisk called Cleopatra's Needle arrived in New York City. It was presented to America by the Khedive of Egypt and was set up in Central Park, New York City, where it now stands, an object of interest to sightseers.

The name, Cleopatra's Needles, was given to two Egyptian obeliaks which were placed at the entrance of the Temple of the Sun in Heliopolis, Egypt, by the Egyptian king, Thothmes III, about 1831 B. C. We have no means of knowing when they were built, or by whom, except from the inscriptions on them, which indicated the above time. They are made of rose-red granite brought from Syene, near the first cataract of the Nile. Two centuries after their erection Rameses II had the stones nearly covered with carving setting forth his own greatness and achievements. Twenty-three years before Christ, Augustus Caesar moved the obeliaks from Heliopolis to Alexandria and set them up in the Caesarium, a palace which now stands, a mere mass of ruins, near the station of the railroad to Cairo. In 1819 one of these obeliaks was presented by the Egyptian government to England, but, as no one knew how to move it, it was not taken to London until 1878. Then, in 1880, the other obelisk was presented to the United States.

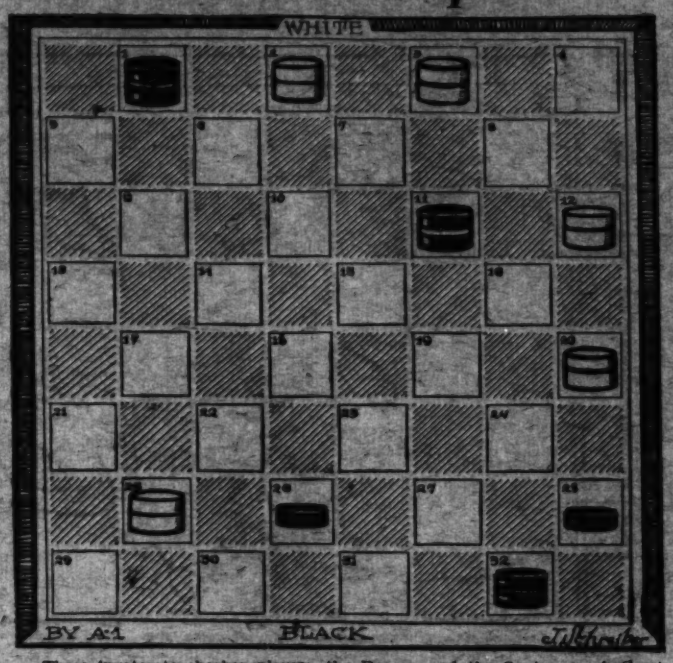
Deacon and Squire

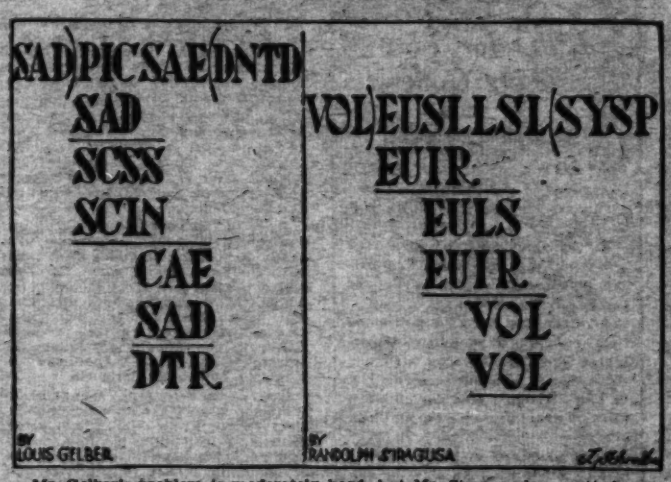


Those inveterate checker players, the Deacon and the Squire, are back at their board again, huddled over a singular problem submitted to them by A-1. The Deacon, playing Black and moving upwards, has two men and only three kings, while the Squire has five White kings.

Nevertheless, Black can force White, in five moves, to a position in which White will immediately resign. Can you see how it is done? It is now Black's move.

(Answer on this page.)

Letter Divisions



Mr. Gelber's problem is moderately hard, but Mr. Siraguss has spotted you 1 and 0 and still defies you to solve the puzzle. In each of them the letters represent the digits from 1 to 0, each letter standing for the same digit wherever it appears. Since the form of the problem is that of an ordinary sum in long division, the number assigned to each letter may be deduced. For instance, the first sum D is plainly one, since D times SAD equals SAD. When arranged in order from 1 to 0, the letters will spell a ten-letter word.

Are You Logical?

Zeno, one of the ancient Alexandrian philosophers, was in the habit of asking embarrassing questions like this:

Achilles and a tortoise held a race. The tortoise was given a start of 100 yards. Achilles could run ten times as fast as the tortoise. Thus, says Zeno, while Achilles ran the 100 yards, the tortoise ran ten. While Achilles ran the ten yards, the tortoise ran one, and so on, a certain distance always remaining between them. Therefore Achilles never caught the tortoise. What is wrong?

(Answer on this page.)

Adding a Letter

Len contributes this one:

Rearrange the letters of Osteopath with another T and form an English word.

Here are some others along the same lines: Scramble Point with a K. Scramble Pouches with a Y. Scramble Uncles with a U. Scramble Remade with an R. Scramble Rebate with an H. Compound words are allowed.

(Answer on this page.)

ANSWERS TO TODAY'S PUZZLES

Are You Logical?

The mathematician's answer to this question is that the movements of Achilles and the tortoise are independent, and that it is incorrect to assume that Achilles steps down the distance he runs to that set by the tortoise. The distance between them not only approaches zero by tenths, but actually reaches zero at some point. It is not difficult to calculate just when Achilles would catch up to the tortoise, if some definite speed or distance is given. Zeno's use of proportion causes the trouble.

Beating the Dutch.

Let us call the amount of money in the box X, and it becomes a simple matter to explain how Pat put one over on the Dutchman.

As instructed, the Dutchman deducted $642.53 plus X from the original $1,000, which left $357.47 minus X. Now substract $357.47 minus X from $357.47 and, of course, X remains.

Black forces a win by the following five moves:

Black.	White.
26-22	25-18
1-6	2-9
32-24	30-27
32-23-14-5	3 to 7 or 8
11 to 2 or 4	Resigns

White resigns because Black has two kings to his one, a certain victory for Black. For those who do not know the end play of two against one, here is the procedure, placing Black's two kings on 24 and 19, and White's king on 28. It is White's move. This position is easily reached by ordinary play.

It's a Sin To Stay Fat

So Easy to Reduce

Look about you. Note how slender figures now displace the fat so common years ago. There has come a new era, based on a new discovery. Doctors the world over now employ it. The results are seen in every circle.

When you know how fat blights health, beauty and efficiency—how it robs life of half its joys—don't you think it a sin to stay fat?

Some years ago, medical research discovered a great cause of excess fat. It lies in a weakened gland, whose secretions largely control nutrition. That gland secretion is intended to change food into fuel and energy. If it is scant, too much food turns to fat.

Since that discovery, doctors the world over have been feeding that gland in obesity. The results have brought a new era to the over-fat, as you see on every side.

Marmola prescription tablets are based on that gland factor which modern doctors now employ. The tablets are employed by a world-famous medical laboratory. They have been used for 24 years—millions of boxes of them. Most of you have friends who can tell you what they do.

Wise people have deserted the old ways of reduction—abnormal exercise and diet, harmful drugs. And the false treatments, of which there have been so many. They are keeping slender in this easy, pleasant, right way. And they are gaining new health and vitality as the weight goes down.

Each box of Marmola contains the formula complete. Also a complete explanation as to why the pounds go. You know exactly what you are taking, and why.

Go get a box today. Price $1.00. It is folly to stay fat in these scientific days. Simply take four tablets daily until weight comes down to normal.

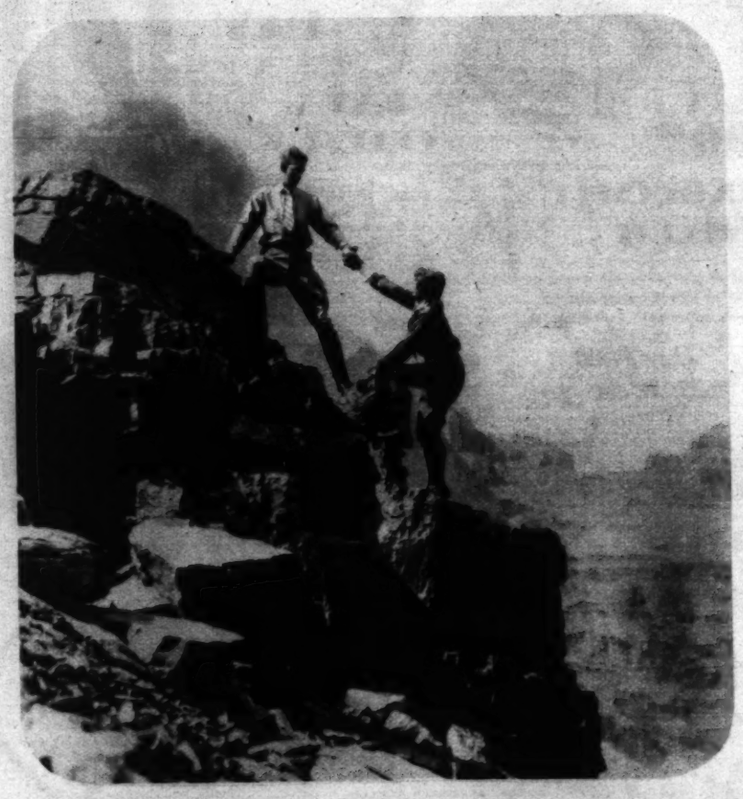
High and clear in the morning sun they find exhilaration



UNDER a bright and azure sky . . . the sun beating down upon them, they climb in the cool, thin air. They laugh. They are joyful. They find exhilaration.

Here are sportsmen. No wonder they drink "Canada Dry." It is the beverage of sportsmen. Keen as the air at the mountain's peak, exhilarating as exercise, it has the vigor and healthfulness that appeal to every lover of sport.

Like sportsmen, "Canada Dry" has the thoroughbred quality, basic excellence. Its very foundation is "Liquid Ginger"—which we make from selected Jamaica ginger root by a special process. This process is exclusively controlled by us and, unlike any other method, retains for "Canada Dry" all of the original aroma, flavor and natural essence of the ginger root. Rigid laboratory control assures uniformity, purity and highest quality. A special process of carbonation enables "Canada Dry" to retain its sparkle long after the bottle is opened.

As a result this fine old ginger ale has won the connoisseur's nod of approval. The fame of its matchless flavor has circled the world. From New York to Paris . . . from Cairo to Rio de Janeiro . . . wherever you may travel you will find "Canada Dry." And in countless homes throughout this country this marvelous beverage lends distinction and gaiety to entertaining.

HAVE YOU TRIED — ?

Canada Dry's new Golden Ginger Ale. Never before have you tasted a golden ginger ale with such a marvelous flavor. The secret of its delight comes from a secret and exclusive process of beverage making. Try it today.

SAY SLIM YOU'RE A WOW!

BUCK ROGERS 2430 A.D.

By PHIL NOWLAN DICK CALKINS

THE FLYING ROBOT

WITH LALLA IN HIS CLUTCHES, THE MYSTERIOUS SATURNIAN SPED ON, OVER LAND AND SEA.

IS THERE NO HOPE? CAN NOBODY SAVE ME?

NO! — WHEN I HAVE SETTLED BOBAR, YOU SHALL BE MY BRIDE ON FAR SATURN!

MEANWHILE WE RETURNED TO THE CITY, WHERE WE HELD A "COUNCIL OF WAR".

YES - BUT HE'S GOTTEN AWAY!

AND KIDNAPPED THAT LITTLE HINDU GIRL, LALLA. - YOU KNOW - I - I - KIND OF LIKE HER!

WELL, IF I KNOW BUDDY - HE'LL FIND A WAY TO STOP HIM!

WELL, WE KNOW THE SATURNIAN IS ONE OF THREE MEN ANYHOW.

I DID HAVE A PLAN. FOR A LONG TIME I HAD BEEN THINKING OF A FLYING ROBOT-RADIO-CONTROLLED, WITH ATTRACTOR-BEAM PROPULSION. I HAD IT BUILT AND SHOWED IT TO ALURA AND MARY.

WITH THIS CONTROL BOX I CAN MAKE IT DO ANYTHING, AND TALK THROUGH IT.

WONDERFUL!

OH! I THINK IT'S JUST TOO CLICKY!

WITH THIS CONTROL BOX I CAN MAKE IT DO ANYTHING, AND TALK THROUGH IT!

THEY WERE SCRAPPING AN OLD ROCKET SHIP. HOVERING ABOVE ON MY FLYING BELT, I PUT THE ROBOT TO WORK.

IT AIN'T SO - - BUT THERE IT IS!

FELLER! FROM NOW ON I'M GONNA BE A ROBOT OPERATOR!

I EXPLAINED MY PLAN TO BOBAR.

THE SATURNIAN WILL NEVER DREAM WE'VE GONE TO HIMALAYA - AND BESIDES IF WE CAN GET HIS SPACE SHIP -

SO I HOPPED OFF - SENDING ROBOT ON AHEAD OF ME.

WHEN I WAS OUT OF SIGHT BOBAR AND DAV DALI FOLLOWED, GUIDED BY MY AUTOMATIC RADIO BEACON!

IF HE'S AMBUSHED WE'LL SURPRISE THE AM-BUSHERS!

AND OOFAH FOR THEM!

FAR BEHIND BOBAR AND DAV CAME ALURA AND MARY, IN A LITTLE ROCKETABOUT!

BUDDY'S SO RECKLESS!!

SO IS BOBAR!

ON - - ON WE SPED - OVER THE ATLANTIC.

IF BUCK ROGERS COULD ONLY SEE US NOW!

IF BUCK ROGERS COULD ONLY SEE US NOW!

BUT ONCE OVER HIMALAYA, I HID BEHIND A CLOUD, AND SENT ROBOT DIVING DOWN.

AMMUL! - HABBIB! - KIZZAT!! - LALLA!!

WHAT IS IT?

SOME CREATURE FROM ANOTHER PLANET!

ALLAH PRESERVE US!

AN INSTANT LATER - -

DON'T BE LIKE THAT! - COME BACK HERE. - I WANT TO TALK TO YOU!
